This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFATORY NOTE.

THE two Wardrobe Accounts now printed in their entirety for the first time have been hitherto known to but a few writers, who have, however, used them as important sources of information. Beltz in 1841 made use of both, among other Duchy accounts, for his notice of Henry IV. in youth;[a] Mrs. Everett Green ransacked them for her "Lives of the Princesses" (1851);[b] but although the journeys to which they relate are known from chronicles, it was not till the late Professor Pauli, then of Rostock, recognised their interest and value for students of the history of Prussia and of the Teutonic knights that any considerable attempt was made to publish their contents. In December, 1868, the large mass of non-public documents and records belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster, and hitherto kept at the office of the Duchy, were presented by the Queen, as Duchess of Lancaster, to the nation, and were transferred to the Public Record Office. Previously to this, however, in 1856, Dr. Pauli, in the course of his researches on English history at the Duchy office, found and re-discovered the first book of accounts in question, viz., those of 1390-91. He communicated a paper containing an excellent sketch of the contents of this to Dr. Pertz, who read it at a meeting of the Berlin Academy of Science on 6 August, 1857;[c] and furnished another, consisting of such extracts from the MS. as he had had time to make, relating especially to the Prussian details, which was published in the collection "Scriptores Rerum Prussicarum,"[a] set on foot in 1861 by Dr. Theo. Hirsch, Max Töppen, and E. Strelke. In the first of these papers Professor Pauli expressed his regret that he had not succeeded in finding the similar account for Derby's voyage of 1392-3, which was known from some of the chroniclers. On a visit to England some years later Professor Pauli had the pleasure of seeing this account also, and published an analysis and reports upon it in the "Nachrichten" of the Royal Society of Science of the University of Göttingen in 1880 and 1881.[b] Through his friend the late Mr. Alfred Kingston, of the Public Record Office, and Secretary to the Camden Society, he procured a copy of the two manuscripts entire, and set about preparing them for publication by that society. At this time Dr. Pauli was Professor of Modern History at Göttingen. He made considerable progress with the work, principally as regards the first account, even having written an Introduction in English, which bears the date 23 July, 1881. Unhappily, however, the scholar's hand was stayed; before his enthusiastic pen could finish his task he died, in the beginning of June, 1882, at the age of fifty-nine.[c]

The unfinished work was thus thrown back for a time, the Society being unsuccessful in their first attempts to find an editor to take it up. Finally, however, on overtures made by Professor H. Prutz of Königsberg, it was arranged that the work should be brought out simultaneously by the Historical Society of East and West Prussia and the Camden Society,[d] I undertaking the English, [c] The Council of the Camden Society, at their meeting on 7 June, referred to the intended publication in a resolution of condolence and regret. See Athenæum for June 10 and 17, 1882.

[d] The title of the German edition is "Rechnungen über Heinrich von Derby's Preussenfahrten, 1390-91 und 1392," hsgn. von Dr. Hans Prutz, Professor an der Universität zu Königsberg. Publication des Vereins für die Geschichte der Provinzen Ost und Westpreussen. Leipzig, 1893.

Professor Prutz the German edition. The two editions are independent as regards everything but the text; as regards the text, the English edition gives the two Accounts entire, the German (depending upon my collation) gives the whole of the first Account, but only so much of the second (about half) as concerns Germany and the journey thence to Venice.

Professor Prutz has been ready for some months, and I owe him and our Society an apology for the delay on my part. When, however, the considerable difficulties of the work are looked at, involving much textual labour, and very much research for elucidation; a work perhaps rather rashly and ignorantly undertaken in my zeal for the honour of English editors on English ground, and having to be carried on amongst other occupations; considering also that the later portion of the second journey offered problems, some of which have proved the hardest of the whole—I trust that the delay will be found excusable. My aim has been to present a good text, according to the manuscript, together with such necessary aids as may make it serviceable to students, and thus to render the work, I hope, not unworthy of the eminent scholar and lover of English history to whom it owes its inception.

When the transcript and papers were handed over to me it was found that much remained to be done; to begin with, no collation on the MS. had been made, though surely Dr. Pauli must have intended this. How essential it was the result showed. The whole thus requiring revision, it seemed best to prepare the edition on my own basis, using the few annotations, explanatory of a few personages, places, and obscure words, as far as possible.[a] Dr. Pauli's introduction not in my judgment now meeting the requirements of the case, and yet possessing a claim on the reader of this work, is not printed in its original form, but a large part of it is embodied in my own, with [ ] to distinguish the writer;[b] the same has been done with some extracts from chronicles, intended by way of appendix. Past labour thus, it was hoped, would not be lost, and would be treated in a reverential spirit.

My best thanks are due to many kind friends for assistance; to Professor Prutz for advance sheets of his edition,[a] to Frau Pauli of Göttingen for placing her husband's notes and papers at my disposal, and to Mr. F. B. Bickley of the British Museum and Mr. C. Trice Martin of the Record Office for reading through the proof-sheets of the text with much care. Nor can I refrain from acknowledging the kindness of Dr. S. R. Gardiner, Mr. James Gairdner, and Mons. Paul Meyer, with ever ready aid and friendly counsel on various knotty points.

[a] I have availed myself in several instances of the notes of Professor Prutz (though I sometimes disagree with his conclusions), and have chiefly followed his identifications of place-names on German soil, which correspond with those of Dr. Pauli.

INTRODUCTION.

The Manuscripts.—The Accounts printed in the present volume are preserved among the rich stores of the records of the Duchy of Lancaster, now in the Public Record Office, where they form part of the "Ministers' Accounts" of the Duchy, and are known as of Class XXVIII, 1st bundle, Nos. 6 and 7. No. 6 is a folio (12 in. long by 8¾ wide) of eight quires of parchment, containing sixty leaves (a few only are blank), written in a regular neat official hand, ruled and bracketed, with titles and some marginal notes written large, according to the manner of early accounts. The old soft leather cover, into which the quires were stitched, remains; the two writs (pp. 1, 2) authorising the special Treasurer and the audit of his accounts being attached by their ends to the edge of one side, while the outside is inscribed with the title of the book, the inscription being on a piece of parchment stitched on to the leather. The book has seen much use, and the cover is coming to pieces, but the interior is in good condition. This contains the receipts and expenditure of Henry, Earl of Derby, eldest son of John of Gaunt (Duke of Aquitaine and Lancaster), over his journeys and his household abroad from the 6th May, 1390, to April 30, 1391, about nine years before he became king. No. 7, containing forty-four leaves of rather larger size (15¾ in. long by 11½ in. wide), is also in its original parchment cover, having likewise two documents (see pp. 147, 148) attached to one side; the form of the account for the most part resembles that of No. 6, and the cursive handwriting is generally clear, but it contains some evident errors, showing that the clerk employed by the treasurer on the second occasion was more careless, or perhaps had greater difficulties to contend with among his vouchers and originals than the clerk of the first account (they do not appear to have been written by the same, the hands differ). No. 7 contains Henry's receipts and expenditure over his journeys and household abroad for the year 16 July, 1392, to 16 July, 1393. In both cases a few weeks of life in England are included, but on the whole they are records of nearly two years of foreign travel and sojourn. Both manuscripts are well preserved and in good condition as far as the interior is concerned; they are, there is no doubt, the official accounts presented by Derby's Treasurer, Richard Kyngston, before the auditors of the Council of the Duchy, and passed by them, to be laid up in the private archives of the Duchy along with other accounts of the like nature.[a]

[The books were evidently made up after the return of the earl from a number of memoranda and jottings on slips or small rolls of parchment and paper set down by those concerned in the receipt and issue of the money as their bills of account.[b] These were arranged by the treasurer and copied out under the heads] which are given in the table of contents, [the monies accounted for on each page being invariably summed up at the bottom of the page]. If the scribe were not extremely careful inaccuracies would be sure to arise in small matters, and this is indeed found to be the case, especially with regard to dates and the names of unfamiliar places; occasionally also with prices and sums of money. The figures, as usual at the period, are written according to Roman numeration, and in trying to rectify them this must be taken into consideration. Both books with their numerous items of constant recurrence are written in close contractions, a fact which has occasioned doubt in some words of obscurity or unknown gender. For the present

[a] For the purpose of illustrating this work, and of resolving doubtful or explaining obscure words, I have had frequent recourse to other accounts of Henry, or of his father, still in the same collection. These are referred to by the abbreviations D. of L., cl., bdle., for Duchy of Lancaster, class, bundle.

[b] See after, p. xc.

volume it was determined to print the text extended, as more generally readable, and for greater certainty the extensions are indicated in italic type till near the end of Part I., except in a few doubtful cases where the contraction is retained.[a] The old spelling has been carefully adhered to, but the promiscuous use of capital initials is reduced to modern usage, and punctuation introduced. The total sum of each original page has been usually set in the margin to allow the full page more clearly to appear, every small original annotation being carefully inserted as helping to understand the document. Two only of this class are not constantly printed, the sign p^{r}. = probatur, occurring at the bottom of each page, after the total (see pp. 9, 113); the other, being the invariable repetition of the sum total written very small at the edge of the lower margin, was of course unnecessary; but both deserve mention as connected with the system of checking the accounts.

Both books have been collated throughout on the MS. twice, besides frequent reference again to correct doubtful points.

The Teutonic Order and its relations to England.— The Order of Teutonic knights had its origin in a hospital founded by citizens of Bremen and Lubeck at Jerusalem in 1128. On the capture of Jerusalem by the Saracens in 1187 the hospital disappeared, to be revived at Acre in 1190 under a new military monastic brotherhood, following the Augustinian rule, with vows to tend sick pilgrims and fight the pagans. Henry Walpot was the first grand master, 1190. Attaining power and influence in 1230 they undertook a crusade against the heathen Prussians, and in 1237 absorbed the "Brothers of the sword," who possessed Courland, Semgallen, and Livonia. On the fall of Acre in 1291 they removed their chief seat to Venice, and finally, in 1309, established it at Marienburg on the Vistula, being then also masters of Prussia and Pomerelia. Pomerania was to follow later. The grand master of the Order with the treasurer and the grand commander lived at Marienburg, the marshal at Königsberg, the grand hospitaller at Elbing, and the trappier at Christburg, the four latter being respectively "commanders" or preceptors of the towns. Other towns had also their commanders, as Ragnit, Insterburg, and many others.[a]

Unlike the Templars and the knights of St. John the Teutonic knights had no property in England, but almost from the beginning of their entry into Prussia the English kings granted them an annual subsidy (40 marks or 80 gold nobles) in lieu of land, which was continued nearly two hundred years, not without some breaks. Henry III., after having granted, presently annulled the grant; but it was restored by Edward I., who twice confirmed it. Under Edward III. the payment, which then seems to have been due at the house of the Order at Coblentz, having lapsed during three years, Grand Master Kniperode wrote to that king reminding him of the subsidy and its arrears, whereupon Edward issued a charter reciting previous grants and assuring the money in future. In it he acknowledges the hospitality which the masters and brethren of the order had shown "nostratibus per dictum hospitale transeuntibus sepius gratanter et benevole," but does not particularize Coblentz.[b]

During the fourteenth century, but especially in the second half,

[b] Six documents making and confirming this annual grant are printed from the Charter, Liberate, and Patent Rolls (English Record Office) in "Archives de l'Orient Latin," vol. i., pp. 416-422. They are of the dates Henry III., 1235; Edward I., 1279 and 1286; Edward III., 1359; Richard II., 1389; and Henry IV., 1401. The letter from Kniperode is printed from the archives of Königsberg, by J. Voigt, "Codex Diplomaticus Prussicus," Königsberg, 1848, vol. iii., p. 117, who also gives Edward III.'s charter (under date 1360). M. Perlbach (Alt-preussische Monatsschrift, xviii., 1880, p. 226) gives notes from the Liberate Rolls of the payment orders made in thirteen years of Henry III.. viz., from 1239 to 1261.

trade between the Hanse towns of the German and Prussian coasts and those of England, such as Boston, Lynn, Hull, and York, was frequent and considerable. These towns were near their highest prosperity, full of craft gilds and activity. Dantzic, which came under the Teutonic Order early in the century, depended for much of her commerce upon English demand, exporting thither corn and wood, while sheltering the English cloth business and merchants within her walls;[a] on the other hand it is known that many houses in Boston were held by foreign merchants.[b] From our Accounts we learn that Derby, in 1390 and 1392, had dealings both in Dantzic and Königsberg with English merchants (acting for the most part as "factors") who seem to have been settled there, John Whytyk, John Trepland of York, and John Bever at Dantzic, John Squirell at König-berg.[c] The interests of York in the Prussian trade were of such importance that when, on a case of grave dispute in 1388, King Richard sent three envoys to Prussia to treat of a basis of agreement, one of these was a citizen of York, another of London, and the third a clerk. The treaty drawn up by these three is dated Marienburg, 21 Aug., 1388, as between the King of England and Conrad Zolner de Rotenstein, Grand Master of the Teutonic Order, and received due confirmation on both sides.[d] Besides enrolment among the state archives the treaty was carefully entered at full length in the municipal records of the city of York.[a]

The political relations between the Order and her neighbour Lithuania had from the middle of this century been warlike; Winric de Kniperode, Grand Master (1351 to 1382), took prisoner a Lithuanian prince in battle; King Olgierd and his brother were the most implacable enemies of the Order. But when by the marriage of Olgierd's son Jagello, Grand Duke of Lithuania (recently baptised as Uladislas), to Hedwig, the young Queen of Poland, on 17 Feb., 1386, those two countries became united, and Grand Master Conrad von Rotenstein made a treaty offensive and defensive with him, peace seemed in view. The Order feared to be overshadowed by these two powerful states. Jagello held a national assembly at Wilna, his own capital, in 1387, his people were baptised, and he made his brother Skirgal or Skirgello lieutenant-general of the Duchy. This appointment, however, aroused the jealousy of his cousin Vitold, the ambitious Prince of Samogitia, and other near provinces; he tried to surprise Wilna, and in 1388 brought his wife and children to Prussia as hostages, applying to the Grand Master for aid. Here was the opportunity for the Order to find their gain in the dissensions of their enemies. The Order took the side of Vitold, an alliance was concluded between them on 19 January, 1390,[b] and under the command of the Marshal Rabe they took the field against Jagello. After a short campaign, in which they had some success, they returned to Prussia. But the enemy then fell upon the possessions of Vitold, one town after another falling into their hands, the strong fortress Grodno costing them a six weeks' siege. Vitold, however, succeeded in bringing about an alliance between his people of Samogitia and the Order, which was settled at Königsberg on May 26, 1390;[a] and thus strengthened, another campaign was determined on. Foreign help was welcome, perhaps invited, from knights of France, Britain, and Belgium. It was in acceptance of this call that Henry Earl of Derby took his way to Prussia in July, 1390, a journey of which the first of the present accounts gives the details. It is hardly to be called a crusade, it was a military expedition in aid of a friendly power brought about by political necessities.

At the beginning of Derby's expedition, on 10 August, when Lancaster Herald took his father's letters to Marienburg (p. 40/7) Conrad Zölner von Rotenstein (1382-1390) was still Grand Master, but he was ill, and died at Christburg on the 20th of the same month. Conrad von Wallenrod had been Marshal from 1382 to 1387; he was made Grand Commander in 1387, and after the death of Rotenstein he acted as vicegerent, till on 21 March, 1391, he was elected Grand Master, which position he occupied at the time of Derby's second but short visit to Prussia in August, 1392. He died in the following year. Engelhardt Rabe was Marshal of the Order from 1387 to Nov. 16, 1392; he it was who now led the allied armies against the Lithuanians Jagello and Skirgal.

Besides the several journeys of notable Englishmen to Prussia, Henry the elder Earl of Derby and John Beaufort,[b] another of Derby's kinsmen, his uncle Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester, was commissioned by the King in 1391, and received licence on 5 Sept. to impress ships and sailors at Orwell Port (near Harwich) to take him and his company to Prussia, with powers to treat "de quibusdam materiis et negotiis" between the King and the Grand Master. His knights and squires had their letters of protection on 23 Sept., but this expedition, quite separate from Derby's, never reached its destination. Gloucester set out, says Walsingham, against the desire of the English people, who feared the King's tyranny in his absence; but his vessels encountering violent storms touched on the Danish, Norwegian, and Scottish coasts, and he finally reached Tynemouth, happy to escape with life, and got home to his house at Pleshy.[a] His herald Croyslett, however, was in Prussia in November (p. 107), he appears in Derby's accounts more than once. We also hear of a Scottish knight, Douglas, and the English Clifford meeting in Königsberg in 1391, when they had a tragic quarrel, in which Boucicaut took up the cause of the slain Douglas, mentioned by several writers.[b] The intercourse between the two countries was therefore by no means rare at this period.

Crusades into Prussia.—[The[c] Teutonic knights, who conquered and annihilated the heathen Prussians, and with the brilliant spirit of political organizers planted a great German colony in the vast territories between the Vistula and the Memel, had been in permanent intercourse with the English Government ever since the days of Henry III. Their Grand Masters, by courtesy princes of the Empire, but representing in reality at the head of the Order the sovereignty of an independent state, appear to have enjoyed regular subsidies of forty marks a year from the kings of England for promoting the Christian faith.[d] During the reign of Edward III., when, after the fall of Acre in 1291, the crusades to Palestine had long been at an end, it became the fashion among the higher nobility and gentry, especially when an unwelcome truce interrupted the wars in France, to fulfil their vows by joining either the kings of Spain in a raid against the Moors or the Prussian knights against their pagan neighbours.[a] We learn from Knighton that Henry earl of Derby and duke of Lancaster, great-grandson of Henry III., in 1351, when the fighting in France ceased for awhile, resolved to go to Prussia instead. He started with a large retinue by land, but being stopped by a set of freebooters or moss-troopers of noble descent, had to pay a high ransom.[b] A contemporary German chronicler, Henricus de Hervordia, gives a very curious account how the vanguard of the little army conducting the treasury of the earl eastward, had a sharp rencounter in the territory of the bishop of Paderborn with a gang of Westphalian knights, who defeated and robbed the Englishmen in a most disreputable manner.[c]] This attack appears to have arisen out of a quarrel between the earl and Otto duke of Brunswick, as to which details are given by Knighton and Walsingham (see also Rymer, v., 742, and Leibnitz, in "Script. rer. Pruss." ii., 47-30).

[Knighton continues, that the English duke, in spite of his check in Westphalia, pursued his pilgrimage to Prussia, but was much disappointed by the tidings that just before his arrival a truce for several years had been concluded between the Christians and their heathen enemies. A charter, issued by him from Stettin, January 15, 1352, is extant in a Berlin manuscript,[d] but he evidently soon returned.

How popular these crusading expeditions to the Baltic regions must have been during that chivalrous period is well known from Chaucer's Prologue to his "Canterbury Tales." The gentle knight had fought with the infidels in Egypt and Armenia, in Granada and Tlemecen,—

It is most significant that a word of High-German descent, reise, journey, which was the technical term in Prussia for a warlike expedition,[a] and which, in fact, had conveyed the particular meaning of a pilgrimage to the holy sepulchre since the days of Walter von der Vogelweide,[b] had crept into the English language by Chaucer's time with special reference to a Prussian crusade.

The “Canterbury Tales” were not yet published, though the poet, as is well known, was already intimately connected with the noble house of Lancaster, when early in the year 1390 the grandson of the elder Henry by the mother's side, Henry earl of Derby, the first-born of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, proposed likewise to have a reise with the Teutonic knights. He was at that time about twenty-five years old, had already three sons by Mary de Bohun, and with the earldom of his maternal grandfather an establishment of his own at Bolingbroke Castle.[c] Whether in memory of the prowess of old Derby, or from the desire to be out of the way of the incessant political struggles, which, owing greatly to the intrigues of his father and his uncles, distracted the reign of his cousin Richard II., we know for certain that the young earl at this period of his life went abroad repeatedly. Capgrave ascribes his pilgrimages to the molestations to which he had been exposed at home.[d] Certainly he had no thought of occupying the throne himself, when, like his ancestor, he first joined the Teutonic knights in the year 1390, and two years afterwards] set out on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

It is extraordinary that Dr. Pauli, with Henry's accounts before his eyes, omits any mention or notice of the crusade to Barbary. Yet there can be no doubt, from the comparison of dates and the sequence of events that Henry set out to go to Barbary in the first place, and that, knowing of the war going on in Prussia, he intended also to join that later. On this subject see further, p. xxxvii.

References in Chronicles.—Several English writers mention these voyages, but the first of 1390 attracted more attention than that of 1392. Walsingham, in "Ypodigma Neustriæ,"[a] has merely a short paragraph on the siege of Wilna, but in his History gives some detail, crediting the English prince with the lion's share of glory. Henry, he says, in 1390 went to Le Pruys, where with the help of the Marshal and "Wytot" he conquered the army of the King of Lettow, taking four dukes and killing three, with more than three hundred of the more valiant of the enemy. He took the city "Wille" [Wilna], on the walls of which his men were the first to mount. The castle of Wille was besieged five weeks, but on account of the illness which troubled the army the Masters of Pruys and Livland would not longer continue the siege. Eight people of Lettow were made Christians; and the Master of Livland took away three thousand prisoners into his country.[b]

Walsingham's account is wanting in minor dates, but it is worthy to be placed beside those of the Teutonic chroniclers, and gives the main outlines of the campaign. Knighton has but a short mention, the most noticeable part of which is his mistaken statement that Derby took a thousand men to Prussia.[a] Capgrave refers to the journey of 1390 in both his books; in the Chronicle by a few lines which really relate to the battle of Aug. 28 at Kawen;[b] in his "Illustrious Henries" he speaks of the same conflict in general terms under the old idea of combating the enemies of the cross.[c]

The above passages relate to the expedition of 1390 (Part I. hereafter). Capgrave is the only English writer who speaks of the journey of 1392; in his life of Henry IV. he gives a detailed narrative of the journey through Europe to Jerusalem and back which is confirmed in nearly every particular by this Account (Part II.), while helping to understand it.[d] John of Posilge also has a few lines on the subject.[e] Other valuable references are found among the Venetian State Papers, French Rolls, and several other Duchy of Lancaster accounts.

[Besides the scanty English chronicles some contemporary writers in the dominions of the Teutonic Order notice the visits of the young English prince and other distinguished foreigners, principally Scotch and French. These works have been edited in the excellent collection of Scriptores rerum Prussicarum, Leipzig, vols. ii. and iii., 1863 and 1866. First are the Latin Annals of the Franciscan convent at Thorn, which after 1360 were continued by an unknown inmate of the house, whose exactness in dates is beyond praise.[f] Relying on these and some other narratives, but chiefly on his own excellent resources, John of Posilge—a parson at Eilau about 1372, who died 14 June, 1405, after having been for twenty years official of Riesenburg, in the diocese of Pomerania —wrote a chronicle in Latin, afterwards translated into German, beginning with the year 1360. This author shows lively interest in minute details as well as large views concerning affairs at home and abroad; indeed he appears to be the most important witness to the grandeur of the Teutonic government in Prussia, and to its high military success just before its fatal decline. Another contemporary, Wigand of Marburg, a herald in the service of the Order till about 1411, after 1394 composed a rhymed chronicle in German. But the original being unfortunately lost, his work is represented merely by an inferior translation into Latin and by a late German extract.[a]

The most valuable records by far, however, of the two journeys of young Henry of Lancaster are his own two Wardrobe Account Books. It is well known to scholars in the medieval history of England that documents of this class, viz. audited accounts of the keepers or treasurers of the king's wardrobe, and occasionally, too, of a prince's or nobleman's, occur now and then as early as the reign of Henry III., and increase in number and importance during the reigns of the Edwards. Though a few of them have been published in Archæologia and elsewhere, they are hitherto far from being accessible. A complete collection of all still extant in public or private archives would open indeed an invaluable store for exploring the ways and means, the demand and supply, the manners and customs, the history of prices, the public and private economy in the course of the fourteenth century.[b]

The payments being issued regularly by the hands (per manus) of some official of the earl for the benefit (pro) of the various people belonging to the retinue, or of the sellers of provision, of merchants, mariners, the representatives of the various trades, workmen, clericals, musicians, mendicants, etc., the reader not only obtains a survey of the manifold officers of the household, but an insight into its requirements while travelling by sea and land. Sir Hugh Waterton, chamberlain, presided over the establishment. Richard Kyngeston, archdeacon of Hereford, was the treasurer. As clerk of the household [?] acted William Haver, who died, however, at Königsberg. A great number of men with christian names and English surnames serve in the stewardship, in different branches of the household with all its more honourable pursuits for men and horses, in the stables, the kitchen, the buttery, pantry, poultry, falconry, etc. From the lists of wages about a dozen knights may be discerned. There are esquires and valets, a troop of bowmen and other attendants of the military profession, enlisted evidently for the reise. Six minstrels, a trumpeter, and five other musicians receive regularly their pay. Derby and Lancaster heralds accompany the earl. Even some vestiges of a private chapel, both on board the ship and in Prussian quarters, are recognisable.[a]

The exact number of the little army of 1390, generally indicated as the earl's household and family, cannot be calculated, since many attendants are not accounted for by name, but are comprised with their superiors. Knighton's armata manus M electorum militum, is certainly overrated. The local chronicler, John of Posilge, mentions 300 soldiers, and distinguishes "many good bowmen." Two large vessels were sufficient to convey the party from Boston to Dantzic.[b] They had German owners,[c] as the names of the skippers testify. The Easterlings and other members of the Hansa were enjoying at that time the full development of the celebrated league of German cities, which may be said to have ruled the markets of the Scandinavian kingdoms and of the Flemish and Dutch municipalities. They carried on a very lucrative trade with England by means of their old establishments or factories, at London, Boston, Lynn, Hull, and Newcastle.

Language of these Accounts.—It is very instructive to gather from the names of the hundreds of persons who had to be paid in wages for their labour and in prices for their goods the overwhelming predominance of the Low-German or Saxon element over the people of Slavic or Prussian and Lithuanian extraction. The christian names, taken mostly from some calendar saint, adopt generally the form which is still in use along the coasts of northern Germany. The surnames, unless arbitrarily supplied by the clerk to the original Hankin, Henrik, Claus, are taken either from the various trades and handicrafts, or from some distinguishing quality, or from the town and province of the owner. However, beyond Pruceman, Pruce, Sameland, there is a certain class of names like Kinge Jekell, Pege Peegolt, Hok, Prak, Burrek, which doubtless suggest the original inhabitants of the country. Others, like Jacob Outremar and Kyrsten van Hostrych, allude at least to an immigration from considerable distances. Now and then among the numerous names from Dantzic the reader lights on an Englishman resident at that place].*

The surnames of the Englishmen here met with may be divided into three classes, and the same remarks apply to all ranks of society; first, those named after a place, as Henry of Bolingbroke, William Willoughby, Peter de Melbourne; second, those drawn from their office or occupation, like Adam Baker, Henry de coquina, William Kaye-maker; and third, those whose names of whatever origin had already become crystallized into true surnames, such as John Cudworth, Robert Krakyll, Henry Maunsell. Many of all three kinds occur in the accounts, and it is interesting to note how easily names of the first two slip into the third class by omission of the le or de denoting qualification. It may be remarked also that though a man was known chiefly by his occupation he sometimes had a proper surname as well, e g., Lawrence of the kitchen and of the scullery in 1390-1 was, there can hardly be doubt, the same as Lawrence Travers in 1392-3, while in John Fyssher the baker we have a true surname. An important fact demonstrated by the study of the place appellations is, that the men with whom Derby surrounded himself, his household officers, esquires, and valets—whether household or military—were drawn from the towns, manors, and villages of his own or of the Duchy possessions. This cannot perhaps be traced in all cases, but it is patent in so many that the general statement may be taken as true; it is what we should expect in the feudal society of the fourteenth century.

It may here be said that the identification of the foreign names, both of persons and places, has in many cases been a matter of no slight difficulty; the safest guide is perhaps the phonetic, putting oneself into the place of an Englishman in a foreign land who tries to write down what he hears. The mistakes of the scribe misreading some letters are accountable for a good deal.[a]

[The language, or rather the jargon, in which the accounts are written throughout at first sight seems to be Latin. It is the Latin grown up from the Pipe, the Fine, and the Liberate rolls, common in the Exchequer, but much degraded by attorneys and brokers, who were accustomed by long usage to adopt the vernacular term for any object that could not be specified by a word of Latin descent. Hence, owing to the use of abbreviations

[a] The word erroneously printed Siron. p. 288 8, is an example; the first letter resembling nothing definitely, I at first took it for G, then for S; there is no hint to help in locating the place. In making the Itinerary, I found that the party must have passed, in all probability, through Verona, and turning once more to the MS. saw that the letter is an imperfect V, the a having a turned end (unfortunately not printed) should be expanded va.

(according to ancient custom), the impossibility of writing out at full length some of the inflexions; hence, too, the favourite use of the French article le before a French or English word without the least distinction of gender.[a] For all these languages, English of course most freely, are mixed up with the Latin substance. Many difficulties arise, moreover, from the indifferent system of orthography, so that certain archaic words and their meaning are not at all easily ascertained. Add a difficult reading now and then, and under such circumstances there always remain a few words which in the end baffle palæographical and historical ingenuity.]

The Latin of these accounts seems to cause much surprise to our foreign friends. Yet it is not so very different in kind, though more in degree, from that of numerous other records, especially accounts, kept in England, some of which must have come under Dr. Pauli's eye. From the standpoint of a classic scholar no doubt the law Latin, and much ecclesiastical Latin of the Middle Ages (such for example as that in the registers of the Knights of St. John at Malta) is barbaric; but for England, viewed as the common official written medium in a country where two languages, French and English, were spoken for two hundred years, it could not help sharing the elements of those living tongues which it had to represent. Life naturally conquered learning. As this official Latin had again in turn considerable influence on the vocabulary of modern English, the study of it is not without much interest for the unclassic student.

Narrative and Itinerary for 1390-1 (Part I).—We must now endeavour to find the sequence of events amidst the, at first sight, very confused mass of items comprised under the principal heads into which the accounts are classed. To supplement and define Dr. Pauli's short sketch the itinerary of the journey will be useful, about the dates in which, after the 19th July, there is little difficulty. Where no dates are given the names of the towns trace Henry's progress. The further sections as to Barbary and Men on the reysa attempt to throw a little more light on points not here alluded to.

[a] It is curious that the habit of using the French article le before certain nouns survived even through the 17th century. In the Administration Books of Wills at Somerset House, ships are often thus indicated, as le New Milford, 1671, le Defyance 1676, le Africa galley, 1700, and others. L.T.S.

The appointment of Kyngston the treasurer was signed on 6th May, for the voyages to be made "in the parts of Barbary and of Pruz." How the expenses were met will be shown further on, though the receipts of course stand at the head of Kyngston's account.

[The first entries (p. 5) are for purchases dated London the 5th and 6th May (1390). It appears that earl Henry first went] by the old road to Dover, the same that the Canterbury pilgrims took, viz., [by way of Dartford, Rochester, Ospringe, and Canterbury to Dover, whence he crossed to Whitsand and Calais (pp. 6, 7). Here he remained about three weeks, after sending a message to Paris in order to obtain a safe conduct from the King of France. Items for the kitchen at Calais,* for large quantities of wine and beer, victuals

* Calais, taken by Edward III. in 1317, was by this time well settled by Englishmen and under an English municipality (Chronicle of Calais, Camden Soc., pp. xxiii, xxiv.). The house which Eustache de St. Pierre had occupied in rue Pedrowe had been granted to the elder Henry of Lancaster in 1361 (Kervyn's Froissart, vol. 23, p. 74). John de Lancaster, esquire, had the custody of Merke Castle, close by, in 1391-2 (French Roll, 15 R. II. m. 12), so that the family, no doubt, had a home there to receive them on their frequent visits, whether the younger Henry had a house of his own or not (p. 76). He was there at least twice in 1390, at St. Ingelbert justs in March-April, and for Barbary in May. The Lantern Gate was the principal entrance to the town, the prison near it, to whose inmates Derby was generous (p. 828), I have not found named elsewhere. One of the churches of Calais, central in situation, was dedicated to St. Nicholas; was it a warning light hung on the tower of this church for which Derby gave alms in the ship on his return to England (p. 3710)? There was a good deal of pontage or toll to be paid here by ships on arrival and departure (p. 3711 19); a source of fruitless resentment that existed on a few years later, 1397 and 1442, for the repair of the haven (R. of Par., iii. 371, iv. 405*a*). As to "Paradis" and the Lanes, see farther on, p. 297. Places near Calais named in our text are Gravenyng or Gravelines, on the Flemish frontier, where butcher's meat was bought (p. 9-11), and Whitsand or Wissant, a few miles south-west of Calais, where Derby's "harness" or baggage appears to have been landed and carted to Calais (pp. 7, 8). This was an ancient town and landing-place; in 1184 Prince Richard sailed from Dover to Witsand (Eyton, Court of Henry II., p. 260).

and provender of different kind, are entered at Calais between the 13th and 31st May. In the meantime two other messengers had been despatched, one from Calais to Hertford[a] and back, between the 23rd and 28th May, and another to London and back (pp. 12, 13), as was Derby Herald to the court of France.] Levnthorpe, Derby's receiver-general, was also sent over to Hertford, probably just preceding his master's return (p. 123). [From these references we conclude that Henry, who no doubt had crossed the channel with a complete establishment of men and horses, must originally have intended to proceed] to Barbary.[b] But his plans were altered, as shown further on. [Derby therefore had to return about the first of June the way he came, travelling by Dover, Canterbury, and Dartford to London. While he himself, it seems, went on to see his father and his own family at Hertford and Berkhampstead, at the castles of Kenilworth and Bolingbroke, his servants were ordered to make the necessary preparations for the sea voyage, and to purchase at London and at Hull large stores of provisions and a quantity of chattels and utensils, all of which were directed to Boston. On the 8th July the master of the earl's ship and his men in port there receive remuneration.[c] Much carpentry had to be done to make the ships ready (p. 27). In the meanwhile Henry lodged and baited at various places, no distinct date being added or the purpose hinted at. However, all the time his retinue, his horses, live cattle, and whatever else was required for the voyage had found their way to the place of embarkation, to be shipped there just before the feast of St. Margaret (20th July, p. 27). This is indeed the last date mentioned on English ground.

It must have been the 8th August when the ships, after passing the German Ocean, the Sound,[d] Copenhagen (p. 97/25, 28), and a large tract of the Baltic, sighted the Pomeranian coast at Leba], where Derby sent three of his trusty men on land. He himself, with part of his company, landed a little further on at Rixhoft, where they immediately had a meal (p. 38); the rest went on by sea to Dantzic (p. 39/7). Derby rode in a cart as far as Putzig, there bought a horse and saddle, [and spending the night of the 9th in a mill near the road, he and his party reached Dantzic on the 10th, where they stayed till the 13th of August] (pp. 39, 40) apparently putting up at the house of Lord de Barser. Here Derby must have learnt that Rabe had already started, and he lost no time in pushing on. Lancaster herald immediately took horse with letters from Derby's father to the Grand Master at Marienburg (40/6), while the rest [had to wait till the horses, the harness, the arms, and the entire outfit had arrived from the ships, and to purchase fresh stores and horses for the Reysa and the journey towards Königsberg.][a] Crossing the Vistula (p. 44/4) without staying at Marienburg, they spent the night of the 13th at the village of Schonberg; [on the 14th they stopped for the night at Elbing, rode the next day through Braunsberg and Brandenburg, and arrived on the 16th at Konigsberg (pp. 44, 45), while the heavy laggage and part of the household were transported to the same destination on the shallow waters of the Frische Haff by prames, the flat boats of the country.][b]

[a] At Dantzic prames were hired, repaired, and fitted up to convey the heavy stores and fresh victuals, beer, etc., by water to Konigsberg (pp. 40-42) where they did not arrive in time (46 34)—and thence, partly dragged by men and ropes overland (p. 48 14), to the Curische Haff and down the Memel towards the seat of war. They also brought away the sick on 27th August (pp. 50 32, 51 12, 54 2, 55 5).

Thirteen hired carts and carters conveyed Derby's land stores and armour from Dantzic to Konigsberg (pp. 43 22-27, 45 5); but he also bought seven new waggons (carrus) to carry victuals for the Reysa, with horse-harness thereto, which were shipped on the prames (p. 41 8 17).—L.T.S.

[b] From Konigsberg everything was not sent on by the prames; a large number of baggage-carts, driven by Prussian carters, were hired; no less than eighteen of these took baggage to Insterburg Castle (p. 54 17), where the stores were left under the care of a Prussian during the campaign (p. 58 25), while another train of twenty-

The prince, for whose service during the campaign the Grand Master had appointed two knights (heers, herren), to whom Derby paid a good round sum (pp. 54/20, 31, 106,8), started again on the 18th, slept at Cremitten, passed through Tapiau, dined (? the 19th) at Norkitten and entered the Wyldrenesse, now called the Grauden forest, lying between Insterburg and Ragnit, the wild frontier marches which separate Prussia from Lithuania proper, on the 21st August.][a]

On 22 August he came up with the allied forces under Marshal Rabe (p. 50/31), probably near Ragnit, and by the 24th they arrived at the Memel river, crossing it here or somewhat further up. Derby seems to have been welcomed with minstrelsy by the Master of Livland's musicians—that Master having joined the army (p. 105)—and to have received, either then or while before Wilna, several presents from the marshal and other knights, as two or three coursers, an ox, four sheep, and two peacocks (the last three no doubt for his table). At Königsberg two tents, and a horse to carry them, had been hired for his use on the Reysa (p. 50/3, 27), for service and guard about which he had two Prussian valets from Ragnit (p. 105, 17).

On the 25th August the combined army lay before Georgenburg. On the way thither, while near Trappohnen on the Memel, news had come to them of the death of Rotenstein, the Grand Master. They also learned that Skirgal lay with a strong force further on, near where the Nerya (Wilia) falls into the Memel. A surprise was resolved on; leaving the lesser folk and the extra horses to continue with the vessels[b] up the Memel and the Wilia towards

Many were killed in crossing the ford, and Henry lost one of his young knights, Sir John Loudeham, whose body was taken to Königsberg (p. 53/30, see after p. 303). Much booty, including 200 saddled horses, fell into the victors' hands, while three dukes and eleven boyars were taken prisoner. This battle took place on Sunday the 28th August.

Wilna, upon the Wilia (now in Russia), the capital of Lithuania and an important seat of trade, was strongly fortified. It consisted of the city on a hill, called by Posilge the outer or "upper house," built of wood (castrum ligneum, Wigand), and not walled (castrum non muratum, Annals of Thorn), which sheltered numerous inhabitants and merchants; and after this the castra murata (Ann. Thorn), walled or built with stone. The first, which must have been extensive and strong, was stormed by the three armies, who had previously made a bridge over the Wilia, and in a few days, i.e. on 4 Sept., it was won. This, as the chroniclers Posilge and Walsingham say, was greatly due to Henry of Lancaster, who had many good bowmen, and one of whose Englishmen it was who first planted his flag upon the walls of the city (p. 105/10, 24, Walsingham). Fire and terrible slaughter finished the destruction, Karigal, another brother of Jagello, was killed, and numerous prisoners made.

The army then sat down before the two stronger forts, but in spite of mines and engineers[a] and all efforts, the defence was so powerful that at the end of nearly five weeks[b] they were not taken.

and Wigand (Appendix A) for the account of this battle, which has been mixed up with the siege of Wilna by some other writers.

[a] See p. 106 1. The miners worked under the shelter of a machine called sus (105 21), so named because, says William of Malmesbury, "after the manner of a sow they proceed to undermine the foundation of the walls." See Ellis, Original Letters, 2d. Ser. i., p. 33.

[b] Posilge says the siege lasted five weeks all but two days.

The besiegers then, compelled by sickness, want of powder, and the late season combined, abandoned the attempt, and returned to their various countries, Derby setting his face towards Königsberg. Walsingham says that eight Lithuanians were made Christians, so that probably Derby took them to England with him from Wilna. The accounts give several items. He bought two boys (p. 52/26), who were under the care of a woman named Ferwey or Farys, at Konigsberg and Dantzic (pp. 68, 92/21); another woman named Wendell or Wendehull had the charge of three boys at Konigsberg till Feb. 10 (pp. 65/6, 67/24, also 90/20); while the bailiff of the bishop's house at Dantzic had others in his ward, who may have been the six Lettows for whom pilches or fur coats were bought (pp. 113/13, 91/30). One was specially named Henry Lettowe, for whom, as well as for Lettish women and children, many items of clothing were provided (pp. 89/1, 90/34, 91/29, 92/20). This effort toward substantial conversion is worth notice. What gain to the Order the siege brought about it is hard to say; a charter still exists wherein the Polish king Jagello recognises the services of the general who defended his forts and city, gratitude and courage being by no means confined to the Christians.[a] which passed between Conrad von Wallenrod and Henry as to these prisoners, on February 22, 1391, in which Henry tried to get the good word of an eminent Pole, who happened to be at the time in Marienburg, on their behalf with the King, but unsuccessfully. Derby herald was sent to Poland again from Dantzic apparently just before Derby left, in March (p. 111/21); but whether the prisoners ever obtained their freedom, or who they were, we do not know.

[The Earl of Derby returned much the same way he came. Castle Coluwa near the entrance of the Wilia into the Memel, Insterburg and the Wilderness, Tapiau (whence he sent his man John Gylder with letters to England and back, p. 108/12), where the last night was spent, are again mentioned, before Henry and his people re-entered Königsberg on the 20th October.[b] Besides the loss of Sir John de Loudcham, two of his knights were taken prisoners by the enemy, for whose liberation Derby herald was about November despatched with letters to Jagello, King of Poland (p. 108/3,]. Professor Prutz prints at the end of his Introduction an interesting letter (preserved in the Königsberg archives)

An entry on the French Rolls is of some interest here as tending to show that Henry may not when he started from England have intended remaining abroad through the winter, viz. a grant dated 4 Dec., 1390, whereby he gave letters of attorney to eight of his people at home, Loveney and Lewnthorpe being of the number, to run in any English court for a year.[a] This legal document must have been rendered necessary in consequence of his prolonged absence.

[The prince spent nearly four months, including Christmas and the New Year, at Königsberg, a sojourn about which many interesting details may be gathered from the treasurer's entries. There were tournaments and hunting parties (pp. 108/22). The prince was presented repeatedly with horses and hawks, with deer, three young bears, a wild bull, perhaps an elk (pp. 108/30, 109, 111/3, 10, 15). Many members of the court had to be provided with fur dresses. The amount of music he had to listen to seems amazing, for minstrels, fiddlers, and musicians of all sorts were almost continually in attendance upon him. In February, 1391, we find him moving again. At least part of his household was transferred to Brandenburg on the 9th, and to Braunsberg on the 10th of that month. On the 14th at Dirschau, on the 15th they revisited Dantzic, the most flourishing city of the country and a principal member of the Hansa, where they stayed about six weeks.

It appears that in Dantzic Henry had to take quarters for his large company in two places, one a house in town that belonged to a burgess named Klaus Gottesknecht (pp. 73/9, 111/1; the hospitissa on p. 96/2, 12 may have been his wife), where he and his court had lodgings; the other for the larger portion of his retinue was a little out of the city towards the west, being the mansion of the bishop of Leslau or Cujavia, on a hill or rather a ridge of downs formerly called Old Gorka and later the Bishopsberg, at present one of the strong citadels of the fortified city. The old episcopal castle was destroyed by the citizens later, in the year 1415, but it seems to have been a rather dilapidated place, without doors, or the doors without hinges and locks, as early as 1391, since the rooms had to be restored for human habitation and fitted up in many respects.[a] It is fascinating to glance by means of these accounts at the occupations and the manner of living taken up by numerous Englishmen for some length of time in a populous and thriving town, carrying on a very brisk trade with their own country. The most trifling and the most costly expenses for the enjoyment of life and for the approaching voyage homeward, or for the church services,[b] which last naturally increased towards [a] See pp. 72/13, 75/5, 79/15, 30, 86/23. Derby himself stayed at both houses, his residence at the old bishop's house being proved by the item (p. 85/23) respecting the camera et aula, i.e. the lord's own room there, also by the care taken in fitting up the kitchen (p. 79/21). I believe that he stayed at Godesknecht's first, until the bishop's house could be put in order; and the torches borne before him from the town to the house may have been on the occasion of his removal. There was a woman hostess or housekeeper in the house, at least in March (p. 83/13, 22, 77/10, 111/16), and probably all the time.—L.T.S.

[b] Among other things, during seven days (probably in Easter week) Derby made a "pilgrimage" in Dantzic itself, visiting and offering at four churches daily, by which he would, like others who performed the same pious duty, obtain the absolution "a penâ et a culpâ" granted by the Pope, Boniface IX. The indulgences were to be obtained by visiting these churches, and Derby took the advantage of this. (It was in 1390 that Boniface issued his bull against the abuse of the indulgence system by pardoners and quæstors. Jusserand's "English Wayfaring Life," pp. 313-321, 433). No crusading vow, or absolution from it, as imagined by Dr. Pauli ("Pictures of Old England," p. 137), is referred to.

Passion Week, are entered with ever equal and minute accuracy.* Two ships again under the command of Prussian masters (pp. 98/1, 4), but with English pilots from Boston (p. 143), were chartered in good time. A number of carpenters (pp. 76, 79, etc.) had to be engaged to erect cabins for men, stables for the animals, and cages for the hawks, of which Henry took home quite a collection, either gifts of his knightly hosts or of his own purchase. After stores of every kind and in very large quantities, purchased from John Bever and other principal merchants of the place, had been taken on board, and Easterday (March 26) had been spent with festivities and liberal offerings, some of which continued till the end of the month, the prince embarked once more, about the 31st March, from which day till the 30th April no expenditure is dated.

With the exception of an occasional charge spent in playing at dice (p. 115/20) there is not a word about pastime during a long and tedious voyage, which, however, seems to have proceeded prosperously, though we do not know the exact date of arrival. Henry and his men disembarked again at Kingston-upon-Hull, some of the baggage and victuals being sent on by coasting vessels to Boston (pp. 98/5, 99/20). All wages for this account terminated with the 30th April, except those of the treasurer Kyngston who was paid up to 18 Jan., 1392. In the month of January, 1392, the accounts were made up at Peterborough, and audited (? at Bolingbroke) between the 1st and 19th of the same month (pp. 2, 143).

Göttingen, 23 July, 1381. R. Pauli.]

* The last days of his stay in Dantzic, we learn from Professor Prutz, who prints four letters existing in the Konigsberg archives addressed by Wallenrod to the "Duke of Lancaster" (apparently meaning Henry), were somewhat occupied by a dispute that had arisen between one Claus Makenhagen, a subject of the Duke of Stolpe, and some Englishmen at Schonen, the great factory for salting herrings and the herring trade in the south of Sweden. Coming to Dantzic, the man was trapped and imprisoned, and Henry, having it is supposed taken the part of the Englishmen, was appealed to that Claus might be set free and indemnified. He was liberated, but the end of the story does not appear. Prutz, "Rechnungen," pp. lxxiv., et seq.

Through the haze of numerous undated items we can trace Henry's movements a little further. Some of his baggage was brought by a boat across the Humber from Hull to Barton (where was the principal ferry), and thence was carted right across Lincolnshire southwards to Bolingbroke; Derby himself with some of his party rode the same way, all supping "with haste" at Caistor (pp. 98/15). The rest of the baggage was brought to Boston, and thence carted the much shorter distance to Bolingbroke viâ Thornton. Richard Catour, who had been to Prussia, had to be buried at Hull, and masses said for him (pp. 99/29, 117/25); perhaps he had died on board or just after landing. There were expenses at Barton also for a meal for John Beaufort, Thomas Swinford, and others, soon after crossing from Hull, having probably come separately (pp. 100/3). Arrived at Bolingbroke, Henry was not long before he made a pilgrimage to Bridlington, where, as Walsingham[a] tells, great miracles had been worked at the tomb of John the late prior there, giving alms and oblations at this tomb (p. 117); his way from Bolingbroke lay through Horncastle, Louth, Caistor, Barton-upon-Humber, Hull, Beverley, and Watton, all which places are here named (pp. 98-100, 117/1). In the January following he was at Peterborough (pp. 2, 143).

The Barbary Crusade: Derby at Calais.—We must now reconsider the events of the first half of 1390. In 1389 the Genoese, finding their commercial navigation still threatened by the Moorish corsairs of Barbary, in spite of the recent success of the Sicilians against the pirates, applied to France for aid to punish them. An embassy was sent to Charles VI. at Toulouse towards the end of that year, proposing to send an expedition to take the city El Mahadia (near Cape Africa, Tunis), and thus to strike a central blow. The warlike spirits of France were fired, Charles consented, and Louis II. de Clermont, duke of Bourbon, the king's uncle, took the lead of this new crusade. In March, 1390, he was in Paris raising money for the voyage to Barbary. Recruits poured in from France, Spain, and England in such numbers that the Genoese, whose part it was to find ships and to provision the expedition, could not supply enough bread and corn, and the date and port of rendezvous were therefore changed; instead of Genoa about June 24, all were to meet at Marseilles on 1 July, 1390. It must be noted that Froissart states that those who lived furthest from Genoa began to set forth about the middle of May. He adds, "Si misrent bien ung mois ou environ à là venir avant que ils fuissent assamblées." Louis' preparations were successful, and the expedition was ready at the time intended.

Among the English volunteers who actually went were John Beaufort (son of Lancaster and Catherine Swinford), with twenty-four knights and gentlemen and a hundred archers.[a] Henry Lancaster's eldest son had also intended to join the crusade, as proved by the accounts in this volume, which also prove that he did not actually go.[b] In this same year, 1390, from 20 March to 24 April, three French knights, Jean le Meingre, brother of Marshal Boucicaut, Regnault de Roye, and the Sire de Sempy,[c] had held the justs of St. Inglebert near Calais, which were attended by many English; among these were the brothers Henry and John, who, according to the Baron Pichon, took their turn on 20 April.[d] Froissart[e] narrates that the English returned all together, and presumably the brothers were among them. They had then opportunity while in Calais for these justs to learn the proposals and [b] Sir John Hayward, whose "Life of King Henry IV.," was published in 1599, was quite aware of the Barbary expedition, but he mixed it with the events of the Reysa of 1390 in most curious confusion. His relation up to the landing in Barbary —save that he makes Derby go—is pretty correct; then in describing the action he imports the battle at Alt Kowno (without the name), with the slain dukes and soldiers and prisoners as in Walsingham, as well as the five weeks' siege and other circumstances at Wilna, only he calls the city Tunis! See pp. 30, 31.

arrangements for joining the Barbary expedition; and they returned to England to make or to complete their own preparations.

The very first document in connection with the present accounts is the appointment by Derby of a special Treasurer for War, dated at London, on 6th May; in this he expressly states that he is undertaking voyages into Barbary and Prussia, showing that from the beginning not only was the idea of joining the Barbary crusade seriously entertained, but that he intended to make both expeditions. He must therefore have begun preliminaries before this date, and it is of course possible that several undated payments which fall within the year here accounted for may have actually been incurred before the 6th May. Among these may be the letters to some great French official, represented by the erroneous term "seneschallus Francie."[a] It is also likely that Derby should have sent his herald to the French king (p. 15, l. 4) for a safe conduct to Barbary quite at the beginning of May, if not earlier. Whether the August reysa in Prussia had been actually determined on before the alliance with the Samaites, signed on the 26th May,[b] may be doubtful, in view of the hostilities and losses which immediately preceded that treaty; but it is clear that Henry or his father must have kept themselves informed of the troublous state of the country and the perplexities of the Teutonic Order from early in the year. And news of the serious need of the knights may have reached Henry in May and have moved him to give up altogether the Barbary crusade.

A careful examination of the pay lists for 1390-91 (pp. 118-127) further supports the assumption that Derby went to Calais early in May for the purpose of joining the crusade to Barbary. His connection Thomas Swinford, with about twenty esquires and three or four principal officers of his household, were with him at Calais, as it appears, from May 9 till May 31 (some remained a few days later), each providing one or more archers. Two archers are named on their own account, Bodendale and Prendergast; besides these Lord Willoughby sent two, and Lord Bagot ten. All these were paid by Derby; in the case of Bagot's men he even paid their return back to England, five on 25 May, five on 2 June (pp. 118, 122). The fare also of others was paid back to Dover (p. 36/9). Moreover, the pay of all these archers, whose number amounted to forty-one, was made at the rate given for extra curiam, 1s. a day, except in the case of six who received infra curiam pay, viz. 6d. a day. Why should he have incurred this expense? The inference is strong that they had been engaged for military service which was not fulfilled indeed, but that nevertheless they had to be paid before discharge. Boatage was paid for the return of the knights, esquires, and archers to Dover (p. 36/11). Compare too the last item but one of Kyngston's receipts for 1390-1 (p. 4), where he accounts for the value of 16 bows sold in Calais remaining from those provided "for the journey to Barbary," and the large sum, £29 6s. 10d., paid in London by Loveney, the clerk of the Wardrobe, for cloth for Derby's esquires and valets—in which last term may be included the archers[a]—"for the journey to Barbary" (p. 35/20). Again, the first item of wardrobe matters bought in England this year was for 80 bows and 6 broad bows (p. 34), which without very close calculation appears to allow sufficient supply for the archers of both expeditions, especially when it is considered that little indication is given of archers having been taken on the Prussian reysa (it is remarkable that only six are mentioned, besides the "gunner sagittarius" who first gained the walls of Wilna pp. 105, 128). It is clear therefore that Derby made considerable preparations with the full intent of going to Barbary, and the most reasonable explanation of the presence of so many of his archers and esquires in Calais for three or four weeks in May seems to be that he had them there ready for that expedition. Had he meant them for Prussia, with the first intention of taking the road thither through France, as supposed by Professor Prutz, why did he not take them for that reysa when he actually started in July? It is hard to believe the archers could have been on the reysa without his paying them; on the other hand, of the esquires who were in Calais eleven did accompany Derby to Prussia and were with him throughout the year.[a]

[a] The archers on service infra curiam were sometimes designated archer-valets, valetti sagittarii, cf. the items of those who went on the reysa (p. 128), where valettus and sagittarius are with one exception (which proves the rule) used indifferently, and all are paid at 6d. a day. Of those who were at Calais on service extra curiam, only one bears both designations, viz. Thomas Toty's man, called sagittarius till 31 May and valettus 1-10 June (pp. 118, 123), again proving that an archer was a shooting valet. Other valets were distinguished as "valets of the chamber," etc. (p. 129). In 1392 the king ordered that all the valets, and even servants below that grade, of his household should practise with the bow. Rymer, vii., p. 721.

Besides the above, there were many others at Calais in Derby's pay, chiefly from 9 to 31 May, and a few beyond into the first days of June; these were valets and various officers and subordinates, many of whom afterwards went to Prussia.[b] The whole number thus paid (including archers and esquires) was about 120 persons, of whom but a very small proportion, such as Jenico, Elmham, and Stokes, performed merely occasional service.

It is evident again, from the terms of the writ of audit, that something had been done towards the Barbary journey, it is not ignored as though it had been entirely dropped. Kyngston also (p. 3) speaks of his account as for the "voyage ordained to the parts of Barbary," as well as for the voyage going into Prussia. Lastly, we know that Derby sent his herald to the King of France for a safe-conduct to go to Barbary (see p. 15/4). Conclusive evidence of this is furnished by Whitteby's accounts, where it is found that the Duke of Lancaster made a gift of 20 florins of Arragon (=£6 13s. 8d.) to "Derby heraldo domini comitis Derbye eunti Regi Francie pro uno saluo conducto adquirendo pro dicto comite eunti versus partes Barbarie" (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, No. 2). Though this payment was not made till a year and half after the event, the fact was incontestable.

[a] These were John Assheley, John Cope, J. Dalyngrugge,* Rich. Dancaster,* Thomas Gloucester, Roger Langford, Ralph Rochford,* Wm. Sewardby, Ralph Staveley,* Thomas Toty, and John Waterton. The four marked by an asterisk had been at the justs of St. Inglebert in April.

[b] About twenty valets and servants of various grades, from John Countershaw at 6d. a day to John Walker and histen fellows at 2d. a day each, are only mentioned as at Calais, or there and returning to England; a few, as Langdon, Syde, and Wolfley were abroad with Derby again in 1392-3.

Derby commissioned his treasurer, Kyngston, on 6 May, 1390, for his voyages to Barbary and to Prussia (p. 1). From 9 to 31 May his men were ready in Calais; some time in May he sent Elmham, a man of trust accustomed to treaty, together with John Stokes, probably with an escort of three archers,[a] from Calais to Paris, again to seek a safe-conduct from the King of France. Elmham is the only man the pay of whose archers began so late as May 18, which affords ground for believing that they were on the special service of escorting their master on his Paris mission, during at least part of the three weeks they were retained. Derby himself was at Calais till 5 June, when he returned to England.[b]

There were thus, apparently, two attempts by Derby to procure a safe-conduct through France in 1390; perhaps Elmham's journey had reference to the Prussian undertaking; perhaps its object was to carry out the final negotiations as to Derby's part in the Barbary expedition.[c] Whether the influx of volunteers rendered his adhesion unnecessary is only matter of conjecture; it is reasonable to

[a] See notes Elmham and Stokes, after, p. 295.

[b] The date is not directly given, but may be gathered by comparing the dates of the cook's wages and those of other servants, on p. 125, with those of Payne, Staveley, and others, infra curiam at Calais and infra curiam in England, p. 126.

[c] It is, of course, possible that Derby's herald accompanied Elmham, and that the entries (pp. 8/17, 20/9, 15/4) refer to one and the same mission, which in that case certainly related to Barbary; the terms leave it doubtful. Elmham and Stokes were paid at once separately, the herald (a regular retainer) received the chief part of his fee long after, as shown above. Bourbon himself was not in Paris at this time; moving about while preparing, he was at Turin from 17 to 19 May ("France en Orient," i., 172).

suppose, as before suggested, that the Teutonic expedition offered at this juncture much stronger inducements. That the attempts were in some way rendered unnecessary may be inferred from the result; Derby changed his intentions, and did not pass through France at all this year, nor till his return from Palestine in 1393. The personnel of his following at Calais, and of that which actually went to Prussia, differed so much as to warrant the belief that if he at first sought a safe conduct for the purpose of leading his Prussian expedition through France, it must have been for the smaller and less important contingent; and that, going back to England to gather a stronger force, shipping direct from an English port was found to be a more convenient and safer means of transit.

Men on the Reysa; actual strength.—Taking the pay-lists given on pp. 128-133, we find that the knights who were of Derby's retinue for the reysa (18 August to 22 October, sixty-six days), and who (except Loudeham) received 2s. a day for that service, were—

Peter Bucton.	Thomas Erpingham.
Hugh Waterton.	Thomas Rempston.
Thomas Swynford.	John Clifton.
John Norbury.	Richard Goldsburgh.
John Loudeham.	John Loveyn.

To these we must add William Willoughby, who received his pay in a lump sum on Oct. 28, just after the end of the expedition (p. 106/12). This pay (£10) may have included an archer (he was paid separately for two archers sent to Calais, p. 119).

Erpingham took an esquire, Bucton and Swinford an archer (or archer-valet) each, H. Waterton and Norbury two archers each.* Clifton, Goldsburgh, and Loveyn were only paid for these sixty-six days, and we do not hear of them again, except that Clifton was repaid the purchase of a chess board and men for Derby (p. 113/17).

* These are the only archers mentioned as connected with the Prussian reysa.

then moved on to Dantzic, where he stayed from 15 February till 31 March, perhaps a few days longer (pp. 72, 117/5). During all this time, i.e., 1 Nov. to 30 April, the pay-lists show that he had a large retinue with him, no less than from sixty to sixty-three persons had regular pay, so that he must have kept up a large establishment. Besides the ten officers of the household marked (see after, p. xcii.), there were Erpingham, Swinford, Dalingridge, Norbery, and Sir John Malet,[a] knights; fourteen or fifteen esquires,[b] besides the Master Cook, and Derby the herald—the latter taking esquire's pay of 7d. a day when merely infra curiam. There were also twenty-five valets receiving regular pay, twenty of whom had been on the reysa, doubtless some few had remained at Königsberg (we find an item for laundry "before the lord returned from the reysa," p. 54/13). Some of these, and nine others besides, to the number of twenty-two, received livery, i.e. a pilch or warm gown, at the New year p. 112), a few also received horses at that time. Add the six regular minstrels, and allow for some casual supernumeraries, and we get the total of between 70 and 80 persons paid forming Derby's winter's establishment abroad.

Habbegood and Catour, two of the valets of the chamber, paid at the highest rate, 6d. a day, died during the year; Habbegood soon after the return to Dantzic in the beginning of November (cf. 107/17, 130/3), and Catour perhaps at sea or just on the return to England, for his wages were paid up till April 30 (pp. 99, 29, 140/7). Oblations and a mass of requiem performed at Hull about this time may have been on his account (p. 117/25). These, with Hauer and the knight Loudeham, mentioned on pp. xliv., xcii., make up the tale of the dead in 1390-1.

[a] See note Malet, p. 308.

[b] The esquires were Houghton, Langeford, Cope, Toty, Gloucestre (John or Thomas), Rocheford, Chelmeswick, Staveley, Dancastre, John Waterton, Hasildene, Rygmayden (William or Richard, perhaps both), Bugge, Asshcley. Regnald Curteys, who also performed some duties connected with the household at Konigsberg and Dantzic (pp. 102/20, 104/4), had esquire's pay from 1 January.

Narrative and Itinerary for 1392-3.—(Part II.) The motive for Derby's second year of travel may have resembled that assigned by Capgrave in 1390, viz., a desire to avoid political troubles at home. He must have heard of the still frequent campaigns of the Teutonic knights, and with a desire for action have determined to go again to Prussia in order to join them in what expedition might be on foot. On 27 June, 1392, the king's letters of protection for a year were granted to Derby and his companions Hugh and Robert Waterton as then about to go abroad; and on 6 Feb. following Derby's letter was renewed also to last a year, he being then described as "tarrying abroad."[a]

Preparations were made then at Lynn[b] for aid in another reysa, and Kyngston was re-constituted treasurer for war on 15 July (p. 148/30), viz., the day before our second account opens, though he charged for a week's wages previously, being the time he took in coming from Hereford to Lynn (p. 291). John, Duke of Lancaster, who had, on 1 July, at Leicester, granted to his son Henry 2000 marks a-year, to be paid quarterly out of the receipts arising from his possessions at Tutbury and Bolingbroke, the first payment to be made at Michaelmas 1392, on 19 July advanced (prestita) the whole 2000 marks, adding to them a gift (donum) of 1000 more, both expressly "for his voyage to Prussia." This we learn from the accounts of Whitteby, the Duke's receiver-general,[c] and the receipt given by Kyngston for this money (p. 147) is one of the documents attached to his second account. Leunthorpe, Derby's own receiver-general, for the same purpose, paid over to Kyngston

[b] While at Lynn, Henry had some communication with Henry Spencer—the crusading Bishop of Norwich (1370-1406), the firm and able man who had led a campaign against the Flemings nine years before, and who in his own episcopate bore hard upon the Lollards—but what message the valet Freeman brought back we cannot tell (p. 270 15).

£100 on 20 July,[a] and with these funds Derby set sail from Heacham, 14 miles north-east of Lynn, on 24th July.[b]

A great part of his stores were bought at Lynn, where also the three ships (p. 278) which carried him and his company were fitted out (p. 157). Several of his men were at Lynn some time making ready (p. 270). Spices were bought in London (p. 160), some baggage was brought from Peterborough[c] in four boats, which seem to have taken three days about it (p. 151/21, 26), while ten boats were hired to tow the ships from Lynn to Heacham (p. 159/11).

The voyage appears to have been quicker than that of 1390, the vessels arriving on 10 August at Putzig and Dantzic, at which last Derby stayed a fortnight. Probably one of the three houses at which he and his party stayed (p. 259) was the house of Gottesknecht, his host the former time (p. 180/14). On 25 August he started from Dantzic, passed through Dirschau to Elbing, where he was the guest of the Augustinians for perhaps two days, making offerings at the abbey on the 29th, reached Braunsberg on 31 Aug. and arrived at Königsberg once more on 2 September. We get little help from the chronicles as to what he did while here, or why he made so short a stay. For he left Königsberg on either 3 or 4 Sept., and returning through the same towns was back in Dantzic probably by the evening of 7th. But Capgrave,[d] relating that "as the lords of the province were not friendly to his desire, he left them," seems to indicate the truth that the Grand Master and his allies did not want Henry's services this time; and this view is confirmed by Wigand, date about June 1392, who says that many nobles, Percy of England, and others, then were there wishing to help Vitold, but that he turned them back when they got as far as Tzuppa (between Insterburg and Kowno), as he did not need them.[a] Derby's visit to Konigsberg therefore, only a few months later, may have been in order to see and hear for himself at headquarters whether anything further could be done, and the immediate hopelessness of action must have driven him back to Dantzic at once to take measures of another kind. A significant item in Kyngston's account shows that the Order paid him a considerable sum, £400, towards his great charges undertaken on their behalf (p. 149 20). The Marshal Engelhardt Rabe appears to have met him at Dantzic (though Kyngston had to go to Konigsberg for the money), and thus they parted at least on fair terms.

Pesilge's improbable assertion that in consequence of a quarrel at Dantzic, in which Derby's men killed Hans, a countryman, he left Prussia to avoid the revenge of the friends, is not borne out by these accounts. Derby paid the rector of the church of Dantzic,[b] by agreement, for the burial of Hans and his servant, while he and his household gave oblations and alms to the poor on the occasion (pp. 166-7, 273), all which are peaceable and regular actions, and evidently settled the matter. The date of the payment is apparently 25 August, so that the incident happened before Derby went to Königsberg, during his first fortnight in Dantzic. Moreover, the second stay in Dantzic of Derby or some of his people extended over twenty days, making a sojourn in Prussia of about six weeks in all.

Prof. Prutz, relying on an entry in the "Annals" of Thorn (evidently misdated 1391),[c] inclines to the opinion that strife as to the right of bearing the banner of St. George was the cause of Henry's change of plan. St. George was the chief patron saint of the Teutonic Order; his was the banner under which Englishmen also went to battle, and they had for the last fifty years especially considered him as their patron, since Edward III. had founded the Order of the Garter dedicated to his honour. Other nations also had their orders of St. George. But on their own territory, and in the reysas on their behalf, the Teutonic knights insisted that they should have precedence, and alone among contingents from other nations should bear St. George's banner. Naturally this led to contention; the English had been prohibited in 1364, and in the summer of 1392 difficulties had again arisen when, in addition to the banner borne by the Order's officer, Lord Percy had unfurled his flag at the head of his Englishmen, peace being only partially restored by Witold and his wife.[a] Setting aside the probability that the entry in the "Annals" of Thorn really refers to the troubles with Percy, Henry might have felt his English dignity offended if he, more powerful than Percy, could not gain the right contended for. On his first and effective visit he seems to have given way peaceably, as we find him making a gift of a dozen yards of blanket to "le Here" who carried the banner, who can be no other than the Teutonic knight (p. 89/28). But the accounts give us no clue as to what happened on this matter on his second visit, except that at Lynn he had made two "getens" or pennons of worsted and buckram, with the arms of St. George, presumably to take with him (p. 152/28). From the materials, however, these were most likely provided as ensigns to hang out of the two chief ships.[b]

Men on the Second Journey.—Capgrave says that Henry took with him about 300 men (the same number was set down by Walsingham for the first voyage). An analysis of the accounts for 1392-3, and especially of the pay-lists (pp. 264-272), must, as before, be our guide, which will give general results, without, indeed, assurance on many desirable details. Altogether we find mentioned eighty-seven men, all but a few of whom he must have taken with him,[a] viz.:

Knights and officers, 10.

Otto Granson.[b]	Ralph Rochford.
William Willoughby.	Richard Kyngston.
Hugh Waterton.	Hugh Herle.
Peter Bucton.

Erpingham apparently joined him on 23 Sept. at Schonec, just as he had left Dantzig, and an Austrian knight, Ralph de Vienna, joined him on 6 April at Venice or Treviso, and travelled to England with him. Another knight, Peter Seinlatour, he met with on his travels. His chaplain, Hugh Herle, receives wages only till Sept. 30, but as we find him at Prague towards the end of October, he was probably with Derby all through, the wages standing over. Kingston, too, was continually with Derby, but for the eight weeks from 1 Oct.—24 Nov., 1392, he took no wages, an omission I cannot explain.

Esquires 15, the two heralds Lancaster and Derby, Master William Cook and William Pontfreit, clerk of the kitchen, made up 19. (Of the esquires eleven had also been on the journey of 1390.)[c]

Valets 49, including as before pages and valets of the chamber

[a] The most part received wages from the 21 July, 1392.

[b] See note on p. 309

[c] The esquires were R. Chelmswyke, Peter Melbourne, R. Staveley, T. Toty, John Payne, T. Gloucester, Robert and John Waterton, the bastard Granson, Francis de Lambardy, R. Dancaster, W. Gyse, T. Goter, W. Rygmayden, Edm. Bugge. Toty and Payne were constant attendants, evidently trusted men; Bugge and Gyse only appear now and then at the end of the accounts. Lancaster herald joined him in April, 1393.

of various grades, also John Fisher the baker, to which add 7 minstrels and 2 henksmen, 58. (Of this division 24 had been on the journey of 1390.)

Thus finding a total of 80 men who sailed from Lynn, which is somewhat higher than the computation (before, p. xliv.) for 1390, we must again count upon servants of the squires and dependents, &c., of the knights to make up near the number attributed to the expedition. In this case, as in that, it is difficult to find the 300, even if we consider that many who were of the company received no wages but simply lived at their master's expense,[a] a large undeterminate body for whom the great quantities of meat, bread, beer, and wine were purchased. That this was the case sometimes may be inferred from an expression on p. 272/6, 14, where we find that several valets and pages had no wages paid them from the 1 Jan. till 17 Feb.—a period which came in the midst of 119 days for which they were paid because they were "super expensis domini." In other words they were boarding at his expense while he was away on his voyage from Venice to and from the Holy Land.

Being returned to Dantzic, and the determination taken to go thence to Palestine, some of the party and stores had to be sent home to England as no longer needed, and those chosen to go on had to be arranged and horsed. A ship was despatched homewards towards the end of September, the master of which, Ludkyn Drankmaistre, received 100 marks or £66 13*s.* 4*d.* for her hire (p. 279), the English pilot, John Benet, one of Derby's men, only receiving four marks for the whole voyage (p. 162/3). This vessel brought to England (?) Robert Waterton, Derby's master of the horse, and his brother John, the four esquires, Rygmayden, Bugge, Gyse, and Goter, about six minstrels, twenty-six[b] valets of the

[a] The figures of the Duke of Clarence, cited on p. xc, confirm this view.

[b] This list is based on the dates for which wages were paid (pp. 267-9), and a note in the margin of p. 267 shows that this is a true general guide, although some of the details are not clear. R. Waterton, for instance, was only paid till 13 Aug., he may horse (as Morley), of the kitchen including John Fisher the baker, and of various degrees; the two chief valets of the wardrobe, John Dyndon and John Dounton having charge of their lord's wardrobe, i.e., his armour and military trappings (pp. 179/32, 257/19, 23). Last, not least, lord William Pomfreit, the clerk of the kitchen, a responsible man, accompanied them, for it was into his hands at York on 12 November, after their arrival, that Leunthorpe paid the 100 marks for the freightage of the ship direct out of Derby's funds at home (p. 162/22), so that this money did not pass through Kyngston's account (pp. 279, 290).[a] When the vessel arrived at Hull the baggage was sent overland to Lynn and thence by boat to Peterborough (p. 162); and Pomfreit sold the victualling stores returned, the money for which he later handed over to Kyngston (p. 151/5).

John Dyndon's wages infra curiam ceased on 22 Sept., and his wages extra curiam were for eleven days after his master left Dantzic, during which time he had to hire a room in which to keep the "garderoba" till they should sail (pp. 268/20, 179-80). Derby therefore left Dantzic on 22 Sept., while his followers sailed for England on 3 Oct.; and the twenty days on p. 259/10 must be reckoned from the 3 Sept., the day he left Königsberg, as his second stay in Dantzic could not have been more than fifteen or sixteen days.

The remaining retinue with which Derby travelled forward was thus pretty numerous, seven chief officers and knights, about ten therefore have been sent away earlier than the rest; he seems to have joined Derby again on 1 June, 1393, when he had reached Chambery. About half the men, including the four esquires and the minstrels, were paid from 21 July till 15 Sept.; the rest, among whom were Dyndon and Fisher, from 21 July till 22 Sept. Travers of the scullery and Kikeley the cook did not return with these, see p. 210, 212.

[a] In Leunthorpe's Account for 16, 17, and 18, Rich. II. esquires, of whom Toty seems to have acted as master of the horse for a time (p. 257/12), the two heralds, and about twenty-five to thirty valets and servants, Shelford, Gilder, and Harpeden being valets of the chamber (p. 208); Crakyll, the trumpeter, too, was not forgotten. Jacob, the guide, was hired to take them through the unaccustomed lands. Between forty and fifty in all, besides supernumeraries, of whom we have no account, and casuals here and there along the route.

More Funds.—Starting anew on a distant journey additional funds had to be provided, and for aid in their transmission the Lancasters, father and son, had recourse to the Lombards. The name Lombard was used in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries as a general term for Italian merchants of Tuscany and Lombardy; among the cities which sent forth into other countries members of their flourishing societates were Lucca, Florence, Genoa, and Venice.[a] Several entries on the Rolls of Parliament show how their success in England, like that of the Jews, excited the jealousy of the natives.[b] The exchange and storage of money was in their hands in Italy from early times, and became extended and regulated as commerce grew and the passing to and fro of crusaders and pilgrims increased. Derby had sent a messenger from Calais to Lombardy early in 1390, doubtless on some financial affair (p. 17, 2) Several un named Lombards are mentioned in Kyngeston's account for 1392-3, from whom articles had been purchased or loans made, one of these men was at Jaffa (see Index I.). The Albertini (p. 150) seem to be the same as the Alberti, one of the chief and most ancient of the families of Florentine merchants, flourishing from the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries.[c] They must have had a branch in Venice; here Derby's attorney (for he was not yet returned from Palestine) on 2 Feb. 1392-3 procured 8,888 ducats in exchange for £1,333 6s. 8d., for which the duke's officers had given bond at Leicester on the previous 28 November to Matthew, one of the partners of the Alberti, and to Dyne of Florence (p. 150).* No doubt this was paid through their London house, where Matthew may there have represented the firm; a few years later express mention is made of Philip Alberti (with other Florentine merchants) dwelling in London, obtaining licence to make a certain transaction with their partners abroad (7 Hen. IV., Rymer, vol. viii. 441), and twice at least before this, Henry IV. procured money for war through the means of Genoese and Florentine merchants, of whom Philip Alberti was one. (Rymer, viii. 359, 383). The phrases "Lombards ou Albertynes," and "marchands d'Albectyn," used on the Rolls of Parliament show the ideas attached to their name, though the distinction might not be clear (iii. 627, v. 276).

Derby obtained money in the same way again from Nicholas de Lucca at Venice on 12 April, 1393 (2095 ducats in exchange for 500 marks sterl.), and from Francis Neerle in France, after June 3 (2,000 francs for 500 marks). These two names do not occur in any of the lists given by Piton or Peruzzi, nor elsewhere that I can find, and the account of Whitteby for 17th Rich. II., which might throw light on both, is unfortunately missing. Besides these sums Derby received various gifts and contributions on his way which will be mentioned later.

* In the account of Whitteby, Lancaster's receiver-general, for 15 and 16 Rich. II., ending 2 Feb. (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, no. 2), is the following item: "Et Matheo domino lumbardo, uni ex consorcus domini Antonii d'Albertis, et Jaketto Dyne de Florencia pro escambio monete Anglie in 8888 dokettis novis de Venys et 2s. 8d. in sterlingis vel valore, precio doketti 3s, solvende domino comiti Derbye vel Janico Dartache sentifero seu alio attornato suo sufficiente potestate habente, apud Venys in festo purificationis B. A note in the margin indicates that Kyngeston, Treasurer for War, answers for this money.

Narrative Resumed.—A safe conduct was obtained from the Duke of Stolpe for the passage through his territory (p. 179), part of Pomerania, he being probably unfriendly; it is the only one that seems to have been required. Leaving Dantzic on 22 Sept. Derby arrived the same day at Schonec, where he halted two or three days. At various points along his journey some of the chief valets were sent on a day or two a-head to provide supplies or otherwise make ready for the arrival of their lord; this had been done on 5 Sept. from Braunsberg returning towards Dantzic (p. 170/23), and now again at Schonec (p. 183/30). This, which may have been a constant practice but is only occasionally noted amongst the items, renders the exact dating of a few stages of the journey doubtful, and in some cases the servants seem to have gone to places (foraging) where the lord never went. Mistakes have been made by the clerk in dates here and there while copying the groups of parcellæ, as well as in rendering names of places; the itinerary has been drawn up after careful study and comparison of all these circumstances, and is, I believe, substantially correct; but parts must be taken with caution.

Leaving Schonec on 25 Sept. Derby passed through Hammerstein and on the 27th came to Poleschken, three miles beyond Polzin. Here in the Mark, now Neumark, he passed successively through Schievelbein, Dramberg, Arneswald, Landsberg, and Drossen, where he quitted its borders and reached Frankfort-on-Oder on 4 October. Passing Goban and Triebul he entered Bohemia at Gorlitz on 7 October and thence made his way to Prague on 13th. Here at the Court of King Wenceslas [a] (brother to Anne, Queen of England) he stayed eleven days; went with him for three days to Zebrak or Bedeler, a favourite country residence (p. 191/7); paid devotional visits on 20 and 21 Oct. to the ancient Castle Hradschin of the city (p. 274/29, 30), and again gave offerings at the relics in the castle at Karlstein, "the proud monument of the dead Cæsar"[a] (p. 275/4). Bernau was probably visited also from Prague about 19 Oct. (pp. 260, 274). Several important purchases were made at Prague of cloth and clothing for Derby himself and the two henchmen; goldsmiths' ware, silver-gilt collars, and a belt; two super-altars for Derby's chapel; and considerable sums paid for tables and scutcheons of Derby's heraldic arms, both on wood and paper, and for painting them. Lancaster Herald painted these arms in Derby's room at Prague, and again at Vienna (pp. 190/26, 279, 280), and much care seems to have been taken by the heralds to have these insignia always painted or hung in the lord's hall or room wherever he made a stay of any length.

By 26 Oct. Henry was again moving to Brod (whence he took two coursers to England, p. 292), and on to Czaslau the same day. In daily stages he passed through two other cities, arriving at Brünn, the capital of Moravia, on the 29th. Here, instead of going direct to Vienna, he turned eastwards; and from Göding, where he and part of his men appear to have crossed the river March, he took horse with Wilbram northwards to Weisskirch (a few miles east of Olmutz) and back, apparently in two days and a half (p. 193/15-18). The reason for this detour is not indicated; it may have been made in order to visit some personage connected with the reigning house of Moravia and Friuli. Jodocus, first cousin to Wenceslas of Bohemia, was at this time Margrave of Moravia, and his brother John Sobieslaw, who had been Bishop of Olmütz, was Patriarch of Friuli.[b]

Vienna was reached and the Danube crossed on 4 November[c]

(p. 194/14, 25). Here he must have hastened to meet the Duke of Austria (Albert of Hapsburgh), who sent letters with his own to the Senate of Venice asking to let him have the hull of a galley with tackle, in order to go to Palestine. At once he despatched his steward Sir Peter Bucton, Sir Peter Solatour (or St. Latour)[a], esquire Payne, Mowbray herald and others, with 14 horses to Venice to arrange for and provision the galley for the voyage (p. 201/28); they were paid for this ten days' service on 13 Nov. p. 202/3; the same party incurred some expenses at St. Daniel apparently a few days later, p. 220/15). John Redington the Prior of St. John of Jerusalem in England was possibly one of the "others," or met them later; and these ambassadors, taking the letters, obtained the vessel, which the College of Signory granted (on 18 Nov.), to be fitted up and in good order, free of expense. Derby was to arm and provision it at his own charge, which included putting in the cabins (p. 219/31), and was not allowed to take any merchandise nor any passenger beyond his own men.[b] Bucton and Redington made an agreement with them for the navigation from Venice to Jaffa and back again, for the sum of 2,785 ducats,[c] so that their generosity, which they made the most of, does not appear very great.

The stay in Vienna was but short, four days, long enough however to permit of communication with the king of Hungary, about 6 Nov., who had a house across the river (p. 195/13). He was following would be a more correct reading, as two days then are unaccounted for; and on the other hand Derby must surely have arrived in Vienna before 4 Nov., which obliges him to get the Duke of Austria's letter the same day. 29 October at Brünn, 30 Gäding, 31 Weisskirch, 1 November Driesen, 2nd Schönkirchen, 3rd Vienna, where he stayed four nights at the cost of Albert III (p. 150/17), so that he would leave Vienna on 7 Nov. The visit to the King of Hungary, and the receipt of money from Albert's officers, are both set down for 6 Nov.

Sigismund, younger brother of Wenceslas of Bohemia, both connected with Derby through their sister queen Anne. Leggings (caligæ) embroidered like his livery were made for Derby soon after (p. 285/32). The Duke of Austria hospitably paid for his entertainment (p. 150/15), and sent one of his esquires with Derby to Venice (p. 285/13); it is possible that this esquire came in company with the knight lord Ralph of Vienna (p. 265), whose wages, like those of some others, may not be exactly set down.

Derby now took his way leisurely to Venice; as for his previous embarkations at Boston and Lynn, the vessel would require time to be prepared. Taking a south-westerly course through Austria, Styria, and Carinthia he passed many towns by daily stages; between Leoban and Knittelfeld, Kyngston and two of the valets were left at St. Michael with 13 carriage horses for a night (p. 198 21). Through Friesach, St. Veit, and Feldkirch, he supped at Klagenfurt, breakfasted next day at Villach, and supped the same evening at Arnold-stein. At Malburgeth on the morning of 18th Nov.,[a] he reached Pontafel and the confines of Friuli in time for supper. In this mountainous and rugged country the difficulty with the vehicles was great, much grease was used, yet the wheels and other parts were broken, and at length Henry had to exchange his carriage for two small ones on account of the narrow way (p. 202). An old carriage was sold for three florins (p. 150/29). Where the Patriarch John of Friuli entertained him, as noted by Capgrave, does not appear; no trace is found of a visit to Udine, the capital, but Kyngston enters money for a night's expenses received from the Patriarch's marshal (p. 150/20).

Passing through Venzone (or Peusseldorf),[b] San Daniele and Spillimbergo, he appears to have made the long ride on 21 Nov. from Spillimbergo through Sacile to Conigliano, whence on the evening of the 22nd, Treviso, recently come under Venetian dominion, was reached. Here was a couple of days halt ;[a] servants were then sent forward with baggage, crossing the Piave at night through Ponte di Piave (Pontegla) and Motta on the Livenza to Portogruaro, where they arrived on the 24 Nov. (p. 204), Derby, himself, perhaps not till next day (p. 205). Here at Portogruaro, and not at Venice, Derby established his people and horses under the chief care of Wilbram and Toty, in winter quarters for the four months ending March 31, 1393 (pp. 210, 211). Here, on 26 Nov., they sold by auction twelve oxen no longer needed (p. 150/31). Hence they went to various places foraging and buying—a man riding with Harpeden "in patriam" or fatherland, as the Venetians designated Friuli then and centuries later[b] (p. 210/19)—to Cavallino on the 28th, Lio (probably Lio Major) on 29th Nov. and 1 Dec. (p. 211/17), to Portlown, which seems to be Pordenone (p. 210,12), and probably again to Treviso. Barges and boats from Portogruaro to Venice were frequently hired to carry men or baggage (pp. 206/20, 207/19, &c.) ; and one curious item shows that it was a hard winter, nine men had to be employed to break the ice between the cities (p. 207/21).

But there were many purchases and much business to be done in Venice, and Derby went there on 1st Dec. (p. 211/16), staying twenty-one days (p 218/28) at a house on the Isle of St. George (pp. 211/15, 219, 220, &c.). On Nov. 30 the Signory voted 300 ducats to give Derby a public reception,[c] which would involve some state honours. Capgrave says he was entertained by the Doge himself. Derby gave oblations on the 2 Dec. at St. Mark's,[d] also on his first visit to the Doge[e] there, and another time they performed the same pious duty together (pp. 275/30, 276/2); indeed, at various times during his two sojourns, he visited and offered at many of the Venetian churches, where several holy relics were commonly shown to pilgrims.[a] About this time Kyngston appears to have received some money from the Prior of St. John, who also supplied more while on board ship, probably at Rhodes (p. 150/1); this money must have been in exchange for a sum paid to the priory or chief preceptory of St. John at Clerkenwell, London, by the Duke of Lancaster. The preceptors of that order being in the habit of transmitting the yearly revenues arising from their distant provinces to the chief house in Rhodes would give the English preceptor facilities for this financial assistance.[b]

A house was hired as a larder for a week, apparently at Portogruaro (p. 207/32), beds hired for the valets, meat was salted, butts of wine bought, spices, bread which was put in barrels, poultry, and other provender. But most of this provided at Portogruaro (pp. 204-211) seems to have been for consumption during December, when there was much passing backwards and forwards, and part, doubtless, was for expenses during Derby's absence. Some officers preceded him to Venice to make ready (p. 206 20). The expenses noted in Venice, both for his stay on going and that on returning from Palestine, are heavy. Litter for beds was brought from Sta. Lucia to St. Giorgio (p. 211/14), and on arrival various things were bought at Lio, a village on the neighbouring coast, or the Lido.[c] Coals were brought to warm the house (pp. 218/16, 219/20), fish, poultry, roes, fruit, spices, and other dainty food, besides the meat, bread, and wine of daily need, were largely bought, apart from the provision for the voyage. Derby probably gave as well as received entertainment. St. Nicholas was another point of importance in Venice, where Derby and his chief men had to do. In Wey's time, seventy years later, the port of departure was near St. Nicholas Church,[a] and it may be that Derby's galley lay there, and that he and his party were rowed to it from St. Giorgio (pp. 219/33, 220).

The provision for the voyages seems large. Mowbray and Harpedon, with two guides, went to markets and fairs in the country round buying oxen for salting; 2,250 eggs, with live poultry, and a house with cages and food for them, were collected; casks for water, cheese, oil, potted ducks, fish, vegetables, condiments, spices, 2,000 dates, 1,000 pounds of almonds, sweet confections and sugar of many sorts, choice wines in amphoræ and in butts, biscuit and fresh bread, for which 40 sacks were bought on the Rialto and brought to the bakery (p. 222/19), four barrels full of various fruits bought from Francis the "fruterer" (p. 223), butter, and fuel, with other things, were put on board the vessel. A lamp was hung in the cabin, a mattress, feather bed, and bolster provided, together with warm clothing (pp. 280/30, 281/18). Lastly, a store of wooden-ware for the kitchen and pantry, besides bowls, cups, and pots of earthenware, and four pairs of tin flasks to put wine in (pp. 220-224).

It is rather difficult to ascertain which of his party Derby took with him on this pilgrimage; the probability seems to be that about 8 or 10 men stayed with the horses at Portogruaro (p. 210), and that the rest of his company, perhaps 40 or 50, with supernumeraries,[b] went. The two Gransons, Solatour (p. 263), Prior Redington, Erpingham, Willoughby, Mowbray the herald, with some esquires and valets, are named on one point or other of the voyage, and the pay-lists, imperfect though they may be, tell a little more. A good number must have accompanied him, and the stores bought at headquarters for a voyage of some weeks need not therefore surprise us.

[a] This appears to be a place on the Lido, near the Hebrew burial ground, east of the city, on a map of Venice of 1540, which shows also two other churches of the name.

[b] See before, p. lv.

Venice was one of the principal ports of departure for pilgrims to the Holy Land in the 14th and 15th centuries, and the route now followed by Derby differed but little from that laid down in the "Informacyon for Pylgrimes" of about 1430, printed by Caxton,* or from Wey's "Itineraries" in 1458 and 1463, from and to Venice. Unfortunately, Kyngston's accounts give nearly all the items for this interesting part of the journey undated; it appears that on shipboard wages were not paid, and things bought at the ports touched at are grouped together indiscriminately.

Sailing from Venice about the 22nd or 23rd December, we find him giving oblations on Christmas Day at Zara, on the Dalmatian coast (p. 277); his course thence lay past Lissa, Corfu, and Modon, at the south of the Morea; thence straight to Rhodes, apparently without touching at Candia, as was often done (no mention is made of Candia either going or returning). Occasion was taken at these points to have the linen for the table, pantry, and buttery washed, an item that often occurs throughout the accounts. At Modon oblations were offered and skins of wine bought. At Rhodes must have been a little stay; in this fertile island, inhabited by the Knights of St. John since 1300, and carefully cultivated, fresh supplies were procured, and some repair made to the rudder, as well as to parts of the lord's armour (p. 283/7), while doubtless Henry, who gave oblations (p. 278/4), visited the Grand Master Heredia in his palace, having Redington with him. But he more likely stayed here on his return voyage, and now pressed on to Jaffa, where fish were bought, and an ass was hired to carry food to Ramah, where more was bought, enough to satisfy several men. Henry the henchman, a guide Antonio, Mowbray the herald, a scalk or servant, the valet Gilder, Bucton the steward, and Kyngston the treasurer (225, 226), and perhaps Chelmeswyke an esquire (p. 277/10), are all who can be traced to have accompanied Henry to Jerusalem). They must, it seems, have gone on foot, no word is found of mule or horse hire or baiting, except one horse hired by the Lenchman from Ramah to Jerusalem (about twenty-four miles), and an ass for the same youth on the return. It is disappointing to find so little said of what was done at Jerusalem, the goal of pilgrimage now reached; only the items of wax candles bought there for Derby and others by "the guardian," i. e., the guardian of the Holy Sepulchre (p. 226/2, 4), indicate that he made the regular visits prescribed to pilgrims. Of the offerings usually made at each of the traditional spots we only get one glimpse, viz., six ducats paid by Henry at the Holy Sepulchre (p. 278/4), unless the oblation made "super montem" for which Chelmeswyke handed him a ducat, refer to the Mount of Olives (p. 277/10). This is the more surprising because Derby shows himself throughout both journeys habitually giving alms and oblations at churches, shrines, and monasteries that he came by, and it seems impossible that he should have omitted these, the most important of all to the faithful. Capgrave says, as he would of course believe, that Derby visited the Sepulchre and other holy places. We must therefore conclude that, as in the case of Thomas Swinburne noted below, no other religious dues were required.

The visit was evidently a short one, but perhaps as long as was then usual, and he hoped to come again; the Earl of Warwick, who also had a galley by special permission in 1393, was only ten days between landing at Jaffa and re-embarking.[a] From want of dates we cannot tell the duration of Derby's visit; fresh food was bought at Jaffa, and he sailed straight to Famagusta in Cyprus.

[a] "Venetian State Papers," i. no. 163. Two other English knights who visited Palestine in 1392 were William de Lisle, a king's gentleman who set out early that year (French Roll, 16 Rich II., m. 8), and Thomas de Swinburne, an ancestor of the poet of to-day, Mayor of Bordeaux, who sailed from Venice on 2 Sept., going by way of Alexandria, which he reached on 20 Oct. He was at Jerusalem from 11 to 17 Dec., 1392. See the narrative and expenses of this journey by his man, Thomas Brygg, printed in "Archives de l'Orient Latin," ii., Doc., p. 378. The only religious dues paid by this party were, on entering the Holy Sepulchre and coming out of it, six and a half ducats and a few grossi.

Thus ended his visit to the Holy Land; his wish to go there again was known and caught up by Shakespeare, whose play has erroneously made the world think he never went at all. In a letter written to the Emperor of Abyssinia after he became king (without date) Henry speaks of his continual hope once again (iterato) to visit the Holy Sepulchre in person;[a] a letter which receives additional interest in connection with these accounts.

At Famagusta Derby seems to have been lodged in the castle (pp. 229/9, 230/3); in another place "hospicium domini" is mentioned (p. 228/3), but this may have been at the capital, Nicosia, whither Prior Redington, Lord Granson, and other knights and esquires went as embassy to the King of Cyprus, James I. of Lusignan (p. 226/27). Capgrave informs us that the king received Derby with honour, but how long he stayed we cannot say. Fear of the plague, which had devastated Cyprus in 1392,[b] does not appear to have affected him. It is difficult to separate the items relating to Cyprus from those as to Rhodes, but judging from their number the time spent in both islands was short; this could not indeed be otherwise out of a voyage which occupied but three months altogether, one part of which (from Venice to Jaffa) was usually allowed to take between six and seven weeks. Some repair had again to be made to the galley (p. 226/25), and a cabin made for a leopard (p. 229/3), a royal beast which it is reasonable to suppose was presented to Derby by the king of Cyprus. Many items occur henceforward on account of the leopard and his keeper, who travelled home to England (p. 256/15), perhaps to be added to the collection of wild beasts already kept in the Tower since the days of Henry I.[c] Henry had also with him falcons, either brought from England as part of a nobleman's outfit or bestowed by some of his noble hosts, and a parrot, probably given him by one of his eastern hosts, appears in Italy on his homeward route with a cage hung by a cord (p. 285/19, 24, p. 286/28).[a] But the best token that he had fulfilled his pilgrimage was a converted Turk or "Sarasin," whom he brought back from Rhodes, baptised by the name of Henry, and for whom a bed, a pilgrim's gown or sclaveyn, a toga, and several pairs of shoes were provided at divers times and places.[b] Together with Herle the chaplain and others, and Derby's baggage, he eventually found his way to Peterborough by the end of June (p. 254/17).

It must have been while in Cyprus that the Doge of Genoa, Antonio Montaldo, presented Harry with a butt of wine (p. 230/3). Leaving Famagusta, they sailed round to Baffas on the south-west side of Cyprus, and thence to Rhodes. Here oblations were again given (pp. 275/27, 276/6, 278/5), especially at the church and holy relics of the knights (p. 277/11), and eight wooden scutcheons of arms painted by Mowbray herald were hung up in the castle (pp. 227/2-6, 283/11). After more purchases of food, and the gifts of bread and a butt of wine by the Grand Master at Lango or Cos, a flourishing island near Rhodes also belonging to the knights (p. 230/10), the ship made for Modon, where three great butts of its famous Romoney wine were bought (p. 230/24), and alms were given to the poor (p. 278/20); touched at Corona, also in the Morea, passed Corfu, Ragusa, where more alms were distributed (p. 278/19) and provender bought (p. 231/6), the island Lesina, the ports Zara and Pola, and arrived once more at Venice about 20 March. The ship's patron or captain had evidently made a good market for himself, as his kind did in Wey's day, with the various articles sold in the galley, chiefly wines of Romoney and of Mark, by his servants to Derby's people (p. 232). He had a wife, for whom Kyngston bought a purse (p. 284/21).

[a] The entry as to the parrot on p. 232 is puzzling. Almandia seems to mean Alemannia, but unless we consider that the Swiss may have been included under this name in the common language among the Savoyards—which is not impossible—there is no point along Derby's route homewards from Italy near enough to permit of the parrot being lost among them. On the other hand, if we take Thos. Dent's search to have been, not for a lost bird, but to fetch it, whether gift or purchase the journey from any part of the route before Venice would have incurred more expense than the item gives.

Henry again took up his abode at St. Giorgio (p. 234/5), where he stayed till 10 April, put up his arms in the hall there, besides eight more escutcheons hung at St. Mark's, as memorials of his visit. On the 31 March the Signory voted that 100 ducats should be spent in honour of his return "so that he may go back to his own country well pleased with us."[a] How this was spent we do not see here, but there was much cleansing and washing of house and linen, and purchase of provender against the festival of Easter on April 6 (pp. 235, 236), Italian pastry-cook and butcher being employed. Many oblations too were made (p. 277), and gifts to the poor distributed (p. 284/25). But already on 3 April preparations were begun for removing to Treviso (p. 236/30), and the steward, the marshal, Toty and others were sent there to make ready, and a boat was hired to fetch the horses and other servants from Portogruaro to Treviso, four days work in all (p. 236). Boats were hired to take Derby and all his family from Venice to Meistre, where Derby supped on 12 April, but his baggage set forth on the 11th, taking two days on the way (p. 237/26, 30). From Meistre to Treviso carts and horses were hired, and it seems that Derby put up at Treviso at the friars' convent, for his baggage was carted thither (p. 237/23, see also p. 240/26). But a good deal of carpentering had to be done at doors, cupboards, and the dresser (p. 239).

At Treviso they stayed till 28 April (p. 238/25), Kyngston remaining meanwhile in Venice (p. 240/20), during which time there was mending of horse gear and making ready for the journey. Many fine stuffs, furs, silks, and linen, had been bought in [a] "Archives de l'Orient Latin," ii., Doc., 239; "Venetian State Papers," i. no. 113.

Venice, collars of silver and of silver-gilt, and a collar and chain of gold (pp. 284, 285, 286/17), which needed chests and packing, and the goldsmith brought his things to Treviso (p. 240/10). On 20 April a cage was bought for the parrot (p. 286/28), a mat for the leopard (p. 240); and finally on 28 April they left Treviso, the falcons borne on horseback for Vicenza, the luggage in carts for Padua. Passing through Noale on 29th the next stages were Padua, Vicenza, and Verona, but none of these are dated, and little halt can have been made, for we find Mowbray the herald at Milan on 1 May, probably, however, preceding his master (p. 287/5, 6, compare p. 242/25). This date is, however, almost certainly wrong, and we should rather read 11 May, for Mowbray and Harpeden were preceding their lord by a day and night (see also p. 243/19); and he seems to have reached Milan about 12 or 13 May (p. 241). This date allows time for the three first stages. After Verona, Lodi and Pavia were reached, where an injured chest and saddle were mended, and a case made to hold four cups fashioned of ostrich eggs (p. 211/26); oblations were made at both (p. 277). At Milan, where Gian Galeazzo Visconti now held sway, Derby made some few days' stay; Capgrave says he was entertained by the count,[a] who showed him the tombs of St. Augustine, Boethius, and of his own uncle Lionel, Duke of Clarence, who had married Gian's sister and had died in Milan. While here too, he acted as mediator between the count and a house of friars, probably Augustinians (like Capgrave himself), with whom some cause of quarrel had arisen, and succeeded in pacifying the matter; it is possible that this may have been the Augustinian house at Pavia, where he had given offerings (p. 277/29). Silks and goldsmiths' wares were purchased in Milan, and a great glove for the falcon (p. 287), also that for which Milan has so long been renowned, velvet, some of it cloth of velvet and gold (p. 288).

On or about 17 May Derby quitted Milan, and passing through [a] He was made duke in 1396, see p. 311.

Vercelli and Chivasso (where he had more silver collars) arrived at Turin on 21 May, where he gave alms at St. Anthony's (p. 277/27), Rivoli on 22, and Avigliano the same day. Hence three mules loaded with baggage were sent on over the mountains to Troyes, in Champagne, whence it was probably carted to Paris (p. 254, 22, 25). Lord Otto Granson, who would have his own reasons for avoiding Savoy at this time (see after p. 309) must have left him some weeks before, perhaps reaching Burgundy by another route from Venice (the last we heard of him was at Cyprus); here from Avigliano Derby sent a messenger on business to him (p. 246/19). Approaching the mountains he appears to have remained at Susa three days, 23 to 25 May; he crossed Mont Cenis and reached Lanslebourg on 26 May, St. Michel and Fontrouverte (to the west) on the next day, arriving at La Chambre on 28 or 29 May. On 30 at Aiguebelle he must have passed through Chambery[a] on his way to Yenne on the Rhone, where he was on 1 June. From Susa onwards he had given frequent alms to the poor and others on his way, to the lepers on the mount at or near that place, and now to a hermit on the Mont du Chat, near Yenne (p. 276). Crossing the Rhone, Derby rested at Rossillon 2 June, St. Rambert 3rd, and reached Bagé on 5th, near which it appears that he crossed "the water between Savoy and Burgundy" (p. 247), i.e., the Saône,[b] entering the ducal dominions on his way to Macon. So on he went by daily stages, thro' Burgundy and Champagne,—now the departments of Saône-et-Loire, Côte d'Or, Aube, and Seine-et-Marne,—to Paris, which he gained on 22 June,

[a] See note, p. lxxviii.

[b] On the "Atlas Historique de la France," by Aug Longnon, "France in 1380" (livr. iii., 1889), Savoy is shown to extend at that period far into the present department of Ain, and though the northern boundary is not very clearly defined, Bagé appears to be in Savoyard territory. The Rhone would therefore be far too easterly to have been the "water" of limitation referred to, which would seem here to have been the Saône. With the boundaries of Piedmont, Savoy, and Burgundy on that map, the rough groupings of items in the text (pp. 246-249) mainly agree a three weeks' journey from Yenne. It is noticeable that he did not pass through Dijon, the capital city of Burgundy, where twenty-nine years before Philip the Bold, son of King John of France and uncle of Charles VI., had inaugurated a new line of dukes and his own long rule. Perhaps Philip was in Flanders or elsewhere at this time. When at Chalon-sur-Saône (where he gave oblations, p. 276), 8 June, Derby sent forward Walter Juteburgh (who had been his messenger to Granson in Burgundy on 22 May) with some of his household officers to Paris, no doubt to make ready for him. Others still preceded him as heretofore (see e.g., pp. 251/29, 253/16, 255,24). Drawing near Paris, at Troyes, he visited the church of St. Antony (p. 276/19), and he was at Grand-puits, near Nangis, by 19 June. Here a division was made; Hugh Herle, Derby's chaplain, with two other clerics and the Turk, &c. were despatched with a falcon and a quantity of baggage from Melun on the Seine to Calais by water, i.e., they were boated down the Seine and round by the coast, paying toll on the river; and from Calais to Peterborough (p. 254/16).

When Derby arrived in Paris it is probable that the uncles of Charles VI., the dukes of Berri and Burgundy, were there, perhaps too his own father, on business connected with the treaty of peace; and, says the chronicle, he went to see the city under the guidance of the former.[a] The three years' truce between the English and the French powers, made in 1389, had in April of this year been prolonged to Michaelmas 1394, public proclamation of which was ordered on 26 June.[b] There had besides long been attempts at forming a lasting treaty of peace, for which Richard II. had given his safe conduct, several times renewed, permitting the French dukes to go into Picardy; in that of 5 August, 1393, he specifies also the English dukes, Lancaster and Gloucester, as having lately been concerned in the affair,* although they appear not to have been fully authorised till 12 Sept. But Derby made a so short a halt in Paris—two nights at most—that he cannot have seen or done much there; his horse's gear needed repair, and some purchases were made for his wardrobe, which included a ring with a balais ruby (pp. 257/27, 287/21-25). On the 24th June we find him at Amiens giving oblations, also alms to a poor madman (pp. 276, 277), and he placed his scutcheon in the house where he stayed (p. 287/31); on 28th he was at Calais (p. 258), and on 30th crossed over to Dover (pp. 254, 256). A bolinger was hired at Calais, pontage, portage, and boatage to the ship paid as usual (p. 279/5-9), and at Dover four boats had to carry the men and baggage, including the leopard, ashore (257/15).

From Dover Derby went by the old road through Canterbury, breakfasted at Sittingbourne on 1 July, was at Rochester with his leopard on 2nd, gave alms at Ospringe the same day (p. 276), was at Dartford on 3rd, and in London by the 5 July. This was slow travelling for a man who was accustomed to move rapidly, but it was perhaps a stately progress and welcome home to the popular young earl after the long and difficult pilgrimage. In London a few purchases were made at a goldsmith's (p. 288); after this the accounts say no more of his movements; so in London we leave him. Wages were paid up to the 13 July (pp. 270-272); Kyngston came up to town in October to certify the loans made by the Lombards while abroad, and was occupied there from January to March following in making up his accounts, which he afterwards gave in at Leicester (p. 292).

[a] The date, 7 Oct., at Zittau, p. 188, if correct, may refer to purchases made by servants sent forward a day or two, belchere was paid on the 9th, the more probable date for Derby's presence there.

[b] The date on p. 260, "Brounslowe," 23 Oct., is evidently wrong, as shown by the direct statement of days at Prague, p. 190/29. The preceding item, Berne, is misplaced. There are so many mistakes in dates and names on this and the following page, that their testimony must be taken with caution. For instance, 10 Nov. is stated to be Sunday, and on p. 202 14th is said to be Saturday, and 15 November Sunday; none are, however, correct, the Sundays in November, 1392, falling on 9, 16, 23, and 30 days of the month.

[c] Probably Bernau, a village near Saaz. Dr. Pauli identified it with Alt-Bernatitz; there are two villages of this name, one near Pilsen, the other near Czaslau.

[a] See note on these dates in Introduction, p. lvii.

[b] I give the true Sundays here, not the erroneous days of the text. It would appear that the date, 18 Nov., at Feldkirch, p. 200, must certainly be wrong, the 16 Nov. is more likely to be right. If Friesack and St. Veit were reached on 15 Nov., Feldkirch, the next stage, would be gained on 16th, and at Klagenfurt (Stamford) Derby supped the same day (p. 202/24). For Villach, the next stage, two dates are mentioned, 17 Nov. is the nearest, on which day also Arnoldstein was reached. As the travellers must have arrived at Malburgeth next, before getting to Pontafel, where they supped on the 18th, we are forced to the conclusion that they were there on the morning of the 18th, instead of the 19th or 20th as variously given in the text. They might then reach Venzone (stated by a note of Dr. Pauli's to be the Italian name for Peusseldorf, and thus to be the place intended by Posidolfe) on the 19th, and San Daniele on the 20th—not on 22 Nov., as on p. 260.

[c] Prandium; sometimes the word used is jantaculum, both I take to answer to the lunch or first meal of the day.

[a] On p. 260, l. 30, next after Posilthorpe—which Pauli states to be Venzone (see last note)—we have "civitatem hostr," which seems to be Civitas Austriæ or Cividale in Friuli (see Stubbs' ed. of Hoveden's Chronicle, iii., p. 195, note [Pauli], also Ferrarius, Lexic. Geog. s. v. Forum Julium). But it does not appear possible that Derby himself should have gone there if his next stages were San Daniele and Spillimbergo. We must explain the entry by supposing that one of his men went there, and another as to John Wilbram, sick at Guydel (p. 210), which I already take to be Cividale, confirms this view. This latter is not dated absolutely. Or was it here that the Patriarch entertained Derby one night, as shown in Kyngston's receipts ? The dates do not seem to allow of it.

[b] Between Spillimbergo and Conigliano lies Sacile, which no doubt is intended by the Cysele and Gisill of our text, but the date there given is 24 Nov., impossible if those given for Conigliano and Treviso are right Leaving Spillimbergo in the morning, the travellers seem to have crossed the Meduna, near Basaldella, then the Zellini, the stony beds of which, called Ghiarre on Vallardi's modern map, may perhaps be intended by the word Gecur (p. 203/16), thence to Sacile and Conigliano in one day is a long stretch, but the dates of the extremes are precise.

[c] Chichon I cannot identify ; it may be some place at or near Treviso ; the payment of "belchere" apparently indicates some place where Derby stayed. No belchere is set down for Treviso, where he seems to have stayed for a couple of days.

[a] A map of La Frioul of 1778 (by Majeroni et Capellaris) gives the Lio del Cavallino, the point of land between the Lido and the mouth of the Piave river, also a small place called Lio Major at the north-east end of the Laguna of Venice. P. Heylyn's Cosmographie, 1670, p. 123, speaks of the forts or castles of Lio as on one of the openings in the Lido, near which ships lay at anchor. The word is a form of Lido from the latin litus, the d between vowels dropping out in the Venetian dialect.

[b] The date, October 29, p. 210, must be a slip of the pen for November, as the "ibidem" in the sentence refers to Portogruaro. The same may be said of October, p. 211, l. 7.

[c] On p. 275, November 2 must be an error in the MS. for December 2.

[d] From Venice to Zara, perhaps, occupied more than one day; as the date at Zara is fixed, allowing two days from Venice, we get the 23rd as the probable date of departure.

[e] It is singular that no dates were kept from the time Derby left Venice at the end of December till he returned thither in March, with two exceptions, an item for oblations given at Zara on 25 Dec., and in February two items for money lost at play in the galley, but in what part of the voyage can only be approximately conjectured. (A few dates of wages in February were kept, pp. 267, 272.) In the few conjectural dates I have been guided by Wey's dates when he went the same voyage in 1458; from Venice to Jaffa took him four weeks and four days. See "Itineraries of William Wey," Roxburghe Club, 1857, p. 57.

[b] The MS. has xxj Maii, but apparently the copyist should have written xvj; it is clear that Derby was at Turin on 21 May, and would therefore probably have left Milan on 17 or 18 May

[a] This place is spelt Fonauerte on Tavernier's map of 1630. The same map gives Riuolle for Rivoli ; both forms are nearer to those of the accounts.

[b] The clerk who wrote out the accounts must have confused two places here ; La Chambre, passed on the way north from Aiguebelle, and Chambery, which lies halfway between Aiguebelle and Yenne. The confusion of dates on the four days' May 28-31, in the two accounts given on pp. 245-7 and 261, confirms this view : he took Chambour, Chamboury, and Chambourell to mean one place, viz., La Chambre, and having May 31 vacant he put in Floren (p. 261) from an item ten days further on. (I can find no place answering to the name Floren on this part of the route.) Chambery, from its situation and importance, must have been one of Derby's stations on either 30 or 31 May.

[c] The Mont du Chat rises between Yenne and the Lac du Bourget. Derby seems to have crossed the Rhone at Yenne.

[d] The stations between St. Rambert and Bagé are very uncertain ; I can only conjecture Pompinet to represent Pont d'Ain, a likely situation ; but Fownteney and Breme remain unidentified.

Chalon-sur-Saône. The word in the MS. is contracted; in the first instance the sign resembles that used for ra, while in the second it is plainly that signifying ur, and here Turnays ought to have been printed. The dates of the two entries, as in some other cases, do not exactly agree, but are sufficiently near; both must refer to the same place.

List of dates according to the MS., which need to be corrected; see also notes to Itinerary II.

P. 193/21, 29 November here should evidently be 29 October.

P. 200/3, apparently this should be 16 November.

P. 210/23, Octobris should be November; on 29 Oct. they were at Brünn.

P. 245/27, 30, these should be 30 May, when, as shown by pp. 261, 276, the party were at Aiguebelle. Line 29, Chambery 31 May is most likely intended (see note, p. lxxviii.).

P. 253/4, the succession of places in the journey shows that this should be 17 June, as on p. 261.

P. 263/4, November should be December (on 1 Nov. Derby was in Moravia).

P. 273/2, this date, 28 July, evidently leaves too little time for the voyage to Dantzic, and as we see that Derby was at Heacham on 24 July, whence he probably sailed that day (Capgrave says in the feast of St James the Apostle, of which 24 July was the eve), he could not have gone back to Lynn four days later. The scribe might easily mistake xxiiij for xxviij, and I propose to read it 24 July. Derby's ships were towed from Lynn to Heacham, 159/11.

P. 275/18, the same error as on p. 263, November written for December.

P. 287/12, this should probably be the 16 May (xvj instead of xxj); on May 21 Derby was in Turin.

Henry's Position in England and Abroad.—The picture that may be formed from these accounts of Henry of Bolingbroke as a young noble and his surroundings is, perhaps, more comprehensive than may elsewhere be found. As the eldest (and only legitimate) son of the able and powerful John of Gaunt he was one of the most important princes in England, moving among the flower of knighthood of his time at home and abroad; grandson of Edward III., and through his mother, Blanche, also descended from Henry III., he was heir to the great wealth of his maternal grandfather, Henry,[a] the first Duke of Lancaster, as well as to numerous grants made to his father, John, and added to the duchy.

[a] Henry left two daughters, co-heiresses; Blanche, the younger, married John of Gaunt (died in 1369, her only son, our Derby, being but three years old); Matilda, the elder, married William of Bavaria, and died in 1362, when her estates fell to her sister Blanche and husband, John being created Duke of Lancaster.

Born 30 May, 1366, Earl of Derby, he bore the principal sword, Curtana, at the coronation of his cousin, Richard II., in 1377. He was married as a boy of fourteen or fifteen (between 1380 and 1382)[a] to Mary de Bohun (also a child under her mother's care), through whom he inherited the earldoms of Hereford and Northampton, and the seigneury of Brecknock, with great estates, that lady being one of the two co-heiresses of the wealthy Humphrey de Bohun.[b] He thus occupied in every way a princely and a remarkable position, and was able to command from the fiefs and lands which owned him as lord a large following of knights and gentlemen, even during the lifetime of John of Gaunt. The interests of father and son must have run closely together in matters concerning the duchy, of which he was Warden in 1388.[c] From an early age his father had appointed certain officers to his household, and one of the most striking facts brought out by the inquiries as to who were the persons and names met with in these accounts is the continuity of their employ. The same men who surrounded Derby as a youth looked after his interests and shared in some measure his pursuits—as the Watertons, Bucton, Herle, Leventhorpe, and others—were his faithful friends and companions in later years, some remained with him till the end. Besides his immediate "family," as the accounts call his own men, there were those who, like Erpingham, nine years his senior, Staveley, Rempston, Willoughby, Thomas Swinford his brother's half-brother, and Otto Granson,[d] were his companions in arms and on his travels, some of whom also shared his fortunes when king. And among them we find men moving whose names have been immortalized by the poets, whose friends they were; the Sire de Sempy, by

Eustache Deschamps; Sir Peter Bucton and Otto Sire de Granson, by Geoffry Chaucer.[a]

Of his relatives we get but few glimpses in the accounts, Duke John chiefly appears as supplying money, or requiring to be certified of loans abroad (pp. 3, 147, 149, 292), and as writing to the Grand Master (p. 40); he was at Leicester with his son in the early part of 1390 (p. 31/31). Derby gave his father a bow from Newark (p. 31/2), and the Duchess Constance presented her stepson with a palfrey (p. 8/3). One peep at Derby's wife giving oblations with him at Lincoln—probably in the cathedral (p. 27/28), and the sailor announcing to him the birth of his fourth son[b] when at Königsberg in November, 1390 (p. 107), are all that we learn of his own hearthstone. John Beaufort, his half-brother, then about fifteen, is once referred to, and his uncle, Thomas Duke of Gloucester[c] (who had married Eleanor Bohun, Derby's sister in-law) comes on the stage through his herald, Croyslett. Heralds, in fact, remind us of more than one important family connection. Zealand, the herald with Derby on the Reysa (p. 107) must in some way have represented there the adherence or friendship of Albert, Count of Holland and Zealand, Duke of Bavaria (1377-1404), brother and successor to the William who had been husband to Derby's aunt, Matilda. Dampier, Horne, and Swethe, are other heralds named; the first was on the Reysa to represent, probably, one of the Lords of Dampierre,[d] the others made shields of arms at Königsberg; none of them are mentioned in the lists of Francis Thynne.[e]

It is evident that abroad, at the various courts which he visited,

Derby was treated not merely as a noble but as a prince of high rank and much consideration. This would naturally be the case in 1390, arising from the occasion of his journey and his success in it. On his second journey, when he found that further stay in Prussia was useless, the circumstance that he would pass the courts of several sovereigns, friendly through ties of marriage, probably weighed in his decision of the route to be followed to Venice. The family party which dominated this side of central Europe were connected with him through Anne queen of England. Anne, Wenceslas of Bohemia and Sigismund king of Hungary were all children of the emperor Charles IV.; Albert duke of Austria had married, as his first wife, another daughter (d. 1373), while the margrave of Moravia and the patriarch of Friuli were nephews to the emperor, and first cousins to all of these. In an age when family alliances were part of the strength of politicians, this conjunction would not escape the keen eye of a man like Henry, brought up among statesmen and accustomed to the interests, wider than those of his own island, which the affairs of France, Flanders, and Spain, and of the Teutonic knights had brought into the lives of his own relations, and to Englishmen generally. He already had some reputation, and was well received by the Venetian republic, with an eye to their own interests. When he reached Milan he could claim relationship with the Visconti, count of Vertus, through his uncle Lionel, the count's brother-in-law, who lay buried there. Whom he met in France is hidden from us; probably no eminent personage till he came to Paris.

As has been seen, he moved along with considerable retinue and state, sending heralds or other officers before him, both to announce his arrival and to provide food and lodging. The herald, sign of dignity and family, accompanied him throughout; and it would be interesting to know whether any of the numerous scutcheons painted by this officer with Derby's arms or those of his knights, and left behind at many of the resting places, still exist.

It is difficult, without more research into records than can now be made, to say what part of the duchy possessions exactly were assigned to Derby at the time of these accounts, or indeed to state what were his usual places of abode. Bolingbroke, his birthplace, seems to have been the headquarters of the family. The castle, built in the time of Stephen, and attached to the earldom of Lincoln (which John of Gaunt enjoyed in right of his wife Blanche), was a spacious building with prisons and four towers, the "prime seat" of the duchy, where all the records were kept, and in one of the towers of which the yearly audit of the duchy accounts was held.[a] It is in accordance with this that Henry's stores and baggage on return from his journey were sent to Bolingbroke (p. 98), and he seems to have returned there himself for a time. But we find him oftenest at Peterborough; he was there in 1390 before starting for Prussia (p. 30); again for making up the accounts with Kyngston in January, 1391-2 (pp. 2, 143); he started thence in July, 1392, and thither returned a year afterwards, while his first daughter Blanche had been born there in the spring of 1392.[b] At Berkhampstead, an ancient royal castle, he had his children in 1402,[c] but whether it were here or at Peterborough that his son Humphrey was born during his absence there is nothing to show, communication between this place and his father's castle of Hertford[d] is all we see of it (p. 28). He stayed at Leicester, probably coming there to meet the council (p. 32, 31/30). Lincoln and Leicester were two of his father's principal seats. From Kenilworth (which had belonged to his mother Blanche) Kyngston fetched the treasure in florins of Arragon given by John of Gaunt towards the reysa, taking it by way of Southam (Warwickshire), Towcester, Stratford, Dunstable, St. Albans, and Barnet to London for exchange (p. 33, 18/23). Derby himself must have been there too after his return from Calais in June, 1390 (cf. p. 125/10, 31/27, 127/1).

The Lancasters had a house or houses in Calais and one or more in London; but John's palace of the Savoy, descended from Queen Eleanor, had been burnt by the mob in 1381, and we do not distinctly see where they now came when business brought them to town.[a] Probably they made no long stay there;[b] like the king they seem to have moved frequently from place to place within their own domains.[c] In Boston, whence Derby sailed on his first voyage, his father possessed a house called Gisbourn Hall, which afterwards passed to Thomas Beaufort.[d]

As with the earldom of Northumberland in 1512,[e] the business of the duchy of Lancaster was governed by a Council, of which we find mention as waiting at Leicester for Derby five days in the spring of 1390 (p. 32); and again, it is by the precept of the Council that Otto Granson received his high pay in 1392 (p. 264). In Levnthorpe's account for 1391 the chamberlain and council are stated to have been at Peterborough[a] when his salary was given; it thus does not appear to have been stationary; probably it met at one place or the other to suit the convenience of father or son. For both Derby's voyages ways and means had to be considered. As has been seen, large sums were supplied by his father.[b] It may be convenient here to recapitulate the sources of supply for these expensive journeys.

It would be highly interesting to inquire into the composition of this council, probably formed of the chief officers of the duchy, and to compare it with the king's council of 1305. See F W. Maitland's "Memoranda de Parliamento 1305" (Rolls Series), 1893, introd. pp. xxxvi, xlvii.; and compare "Rolls of Parl," vol. iv, p. 176 b; vol. v, pp. 383, 384 a.

I. Journey of 1390-1. The total receipts of this year were £4,383 8s. 3½d. (See pp. 3, 4.)

John of Gaunt at first gave his son two sums in gold florins of Arragon, together 25,000 florins. This treasure must have been some of that which he brought back from Spain in the autumn of 1389, "47 mules laden with chests of gold,"[c] as part of the indemnity paid him by the King of Castille for renouncing his claims in that country. Part of the florins were not of full value, so that on exchange there was a loss of £132 16s. 3¼d. on the estimated value of the whole, viz. £2,777 15s. 6½d. (see pp. 142, 3. Four thousand marks = £2,666 13s. 4d.). £2,777 15 6½

On May 8 and 13, from Derby's own officers, i.e. chamberlain, treasurer, and receiver-general, sums amounting to 833 6 8

On June 13, duke John again gave his son (expressly for the voyage to Prussia) . . . 755 11 6

The sale of remainders produced . . . 16 14 7
(Of this a balance of £8 3s. 5½d. remained.)

£4,383 8 3½

II. Journey of 1392-3. Receipts, £4,915 5 0¾.
Balance from the account of 1390-1 [a]. . .	£8	3	0¾
John of Gaunt gave his son 3,000 marks . .	2,000	0	0
Derby's receiver-general	100	0	0
Marshal of Prussia	400	0	0
John of Gaunt at Venice three times, about December, March, and April 12 . . .	2,008	2	10
Ditto again in France	333	6	8
Given towards expenses by the Duke of Austria and Patriarch of Friuli	19	10	0
Profits on exchange	27	6	8
Sales of old things and remainders . . .	18	15	10
	£4,915	5	0¾

It is thus abundantly plain that Derby could have done nothing without his father's aid; Spanish gold sent him to Prussia the first time, and for the second journey the duke's wealth supplied no less than £4,341.

Derby's Household.—A study of the method of the accounts discloses that Derby's establishment—whether at home or abroad, for the continuity was kept up—was modelled on the same plan as the king's, viz. that found in Fleta, book 2, chapters 14-24. This compendium of English law, drawn up in the latter part of the thirteenth century from Bracton's great work, De Legibus, of the previous reign, embodies certain regulations for the king's court and household not in Bracton, nor as far as yet known to be found elsewhere. Mr. F. M. Nichols, on the evidence of these chapters, considers that Fleta must be the work of some official employed in the household of Edward I., conversant with the royal officers and their duties.[b] The rules themselves may be much older, as they are exemplified in perfect working already in the royal Wardrobe (i.e. household) Accounts of the 28th year of Edward I., which were printed by the Society of Antiquaries in 1787.[a] In those accounts the items are grouped or classified under heads according to the officers and their functions; and these general heads, some identical, some modified and subdivided—the duties of the officers becoming more defined as they increased and divided—are found in royal and princely household accounts down to at least Queen Mary.[b] How far great lords usually adopted this arrangement of household would of course depend on their estate in rank and wealth;[c] a comparison between several Lancaster and royal accounts show that the difference was but one of degree.[d]

Both theory and practice in the great households placed one man at the head as responsible for all payments, collecting and recording all accounts daily or weekly. Fleta calls him the treasurer or clerk of the wardrobe, and so he appears in 28 Edw. I;[e] and in the Household Ordinances of Edw. II., 1323;[f] treasurer of the household is the title in 21 Edw. III., and under Edw. IV.[g]

The bursar of a priory appears to have discharged very much the Walter of Henley (see ed. E. Lamond, 1890, Dr. W. Cunningham's Introd., xxxi., xxxii.). But the duties of the Steward in one of these last (cap. 72) should be considered in connection with other household officers.

[c] It is to be traced, much amplified, in the valuable "Regulations for the Northumberland Household" of 1512, edited by Bp. same kind of office.[a] Bishop Swinfield employed a chaplain in 1289.[b] The accounts of Thomas Earl of Lancaster, in 1313, seem to have been kept by his "cofferer,"[c] an officer assistant to the treasurer. The most interesting and instructive comparison to be made with the present accounts is perhaps to be found in the Ordinances for the household of George Duke of Clarence, the ill-fated brother of Edward IV., made 9 Dec., 1469, a few months before his marriage.[d] Here the duties of a numerous staff are set out under the chief officers, steward, treasurer, controller, and chamberlain, as in the royal households. At the end of the ordinances are lists of the persons and horses of the prince's retinue after his marriage, when he went a journey—"in his riding"—apart from those of his "standing household," the last, left with his wife, being set forth in another list.[e] These are worth attention as showing the establishment of a prince, whose rank differed little from Derby's, scarcely eighty years later. The difference of state attendant on a duke and an earl—Derby was not Duke of Hereford till 1397—would count for something, and eight decades may have introduced a little change in details, though not so much as had grown up between the time of Fleta and Derby; but with all allowance made the resemblance in the establishments of the two young nobles is so apparent that the light thrown upon the Derby accounts by the Clarence Ordinances is valuable.

Clarence had the same "accountable officers," also clerk of the kitchen, marshal of the hall, butler, &c. The men accompanying him in residence were said to be "in the court," sometimes one or other would be "departing out of the court;[f]" in Derby's case the phrases infra curiam or extra curiam are frequently and carefully used to indicate the right to lower or higher wages, and show clearly that the "court" moved with and accompanied the lord's presence abroad or at home; this is another analogy with the royal household. Clarence's retinue on "his riding" was for a peaceable journey (he was married at Calais, and leaving his wife there went to England), while that of Derby was for war; but we get a similar enumeration of knights, esquires, valets, grooms, henchmen, pages, and many serving besides, to the number of 183 persons, "whereof at wages and clothing," it is expressly said were only 105 persons. Fifty horses of various kinds were taken; as at "standing household" with his duchess he left 144 persons with 43 horses.[a] The figures of the journey retinue are important, and support the results arrived at in previous pages as to the strength of Derby's companies;[b] two-fifths of Clarence's party received neither payment nor livery, giving their service in return merely for food and lodging, and we may deem the unpaid members of Derby's expeditions to have been in somewhat of the same proportion.

According to Fleta, the Treasurer of the Wardrobe, with a controller, keeps record of the household expenses, calling in every night the steward, chamberlain, purveyors, and clerks of the different offices to answer for their expenditure for the day over food and every other particular. He himself is responsible for the following heads of expenditure: purchase of horses, carriages, &c.; gifts, alms, and oblations; wages of knights and archers; messengers, foreign fees, presents or accommodations; and the wardrobe expenses proper, which comprise purchase of cloth, furs, wax, spices, linen, &c., also jewels, foreign expenses, ambassadors, falconers. In succeeding chapters the officers and their duties are specified,[c] and the arrangement of these supply a key to the understanding of much in Derby's accounts.

It is clear that by the end of the fourteenth century some of the titles set down were treated as abstractions for classification, not necessarily represented by persons, although the old method of calling in the daily items was adhered to. This is shown by the use of the phrase "super officio," as "super officio scutellarie," "super officio salsarie;" two instances of the first occur on p. 23, ll. 3, 24, in which different men are paid, and in a second on p. 22, l. 7, the person paid is a woman.

The ordinary treasurer of Derby's household when at home was Simon Bache, whose "Jornale," or daily account for 1396-7, the twelfth year of his holding the office (Derby being Duke of Hereford), still exists.[a] In appointing a special treasurer "for war" on his military expeditions Derby again may have followed royal precedent, instances of which under one of the first Edwards, and in the first and second years of Richard II., are mentioned on the Rolls of Parliament[b] (the appointment of the last, however, was compelled by the people). During part of the stay abroad, Kyngston deputed the keeping the daily accounts (dictæ) to several others, whose written rolls he used as vouchers afterwards (pp. 102-104).

The following are the chief officers of Henry's household[c] named in these accounts:—

Thomas Herdwyk, clerk, auditor of accounts of Derby's officers and servants (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, No. 5). [He was also auditor to John of Gaunt's officers.]

Thomas de Wombewell, auditor (p. 148/5) and "supervisor terrarum domini in Anglia" (ib. No. 5, fo. 7).

[a] D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, no. 6. This account is kept in the same fashion as Kyngston's, being literally a journal of items, run-on exactly like his, with two days' items in a page and the sum at the bottom of each page. Many of the same names of domestics occur in both.

[c] Those who accompanied him on the journeys are indicated by the asterisk; Lewthorpe went to Calais in 1390 (p. 123). See notes at end of the text (pp. 293-313) for details as to many of the above.

Simon Bache, clerk, treasurer of the household (sometimes called Symkyn Bache).

Peter Bucton*, knight, steward.

William Loveney, clerk of the great wardrobe.

Sir John, almoner.[c]

[a] I have not found any traces of the marshal of the hall, a distinct officer. Perhaps one of these acted as his substitute abroad. All early household books mention this necessary officer. It was John Russell, "marshal in hall" to Derby's son, Humphry duke of Gloucester, who, about 1440-50, wrote the famous rhyming "Boke of Nurture," which tells so much about life in the hall and the chamber, and the duties of the officers in his days. See this in "The Babees Book," ed. F. J. Furnivall, 1868, Early Eng. Text Soc., p. 115.

[b] Although called "clericus domini" (p. 5), Haver occupied but a subordinate position, as is proved by the rate of his wages, those of a valet of the chamber (p. 126); his duties seem to have been to write out the daily bills or parcellæ, and he was sent after Lord Thomas Percy, apparently for a debt, for his fare from Dover to Calais (skippagium), in the early summer of 1390. He was with Derby at Calais in June, 1390, then again in England, and in August must have been in Prussia, but not on the reysa (p. 130). In the winter of 1390, we hear of his death and burial at Königsberg (p. 111), which must have occurred before 9 Feb., when Derby left that city.

[c] Henry gave alms frequently on his journeys, as was the general custom, through various hands, yet the name of his almoner or of the office occurs but once

The following are the heads of expenditure, though we cannot always be sure of the persons who held the office. It is likely that two, or possibly three accounting clerks served for all the offices:—

Office of the hall and chamber.—Repairs and cleaning in making ready the lodging; hooks to hang lights, rushes, tables, and trestles, washing and care of the nappery[a] or table linen, bed, and care of the chamber. Henry Morley and William Harpeden were evidently two of the chief valets of the chamber, John Schelford and others. Nuport was valet of the Body in 1390 (p. 124). In 1392 Maye and Hamond were pages to the valets of the chamber (p. 272).

Richard del Ewery, valet, must have borne the office of his name, with probably a yeoman under him. John del Ewery is also named.[b]

Clerk of the kitchen.—Meat bought in carcase, as oxen, sheep, calves, pigs, and an occasional kid or wild boar; fish—salt, stock and fresh of all kinds (including a porpoise); flitches of bacon; salt, are the chief objects; but he was also responsible for the beating of stock-fish (p 22), for empty barrels and casks to hold water and victuals. Robert Burton was clerk of the kitchen under William Pomfret,[c] he helped the treasurer to make out his accounts

(p. 273 a), and then only as "dominus Johannis," which I take to be equivalent to his title as a priest. I have not found this officer in other accounts, and do not know his second name, his duty would be to gather up the remnants from dishes and tables to be given away to the poor, for which baskets or buckets were provided, also to distribute old horses, cloths, and money. Vetus, lib. ii., cap 23; see also Grostete's "Rules for the Countess of Lincoln's Household," in "Walter of Henley," ed. [a] Sometimes this is found under the Spicery.

[b] The Ewery was a side-board in the hall at which the company washed hands before sitting down to meat. See "Old English Cookery," in the Quarterly Review, Jan., 1894, p. 86.

[c] Besides Master William Cook, at the pay of an esquire, 7d. or 8d. per day, two other cooks occur, William Pulter and William Kikkeley, at 4d. and 3d. a day, as well as casual cooks and a page or serving man, Henry. Gifts were given to waferers, or makers of wafers, a dainty sweet, at Koningsberg, in January, 1390-1 (p. 109).

(pp. 103, 115). Possibly too the clerks of the kitchen answered for the expenditure under the three following heads, viz.:—

Office of the saucery.—Mustard, vinegar, and verjuice, of which many gallons were used, barrels to put them in, mustard seed, sometimes also vegetables and oatmeal (p. 239).

Office of the poultry.—Poultry dead and alive, and the food of the latter on board ship, capons, occasional partridges, geese, eggs and dairy products; herbs and flour are not infrequent items.

Office of the scullery.—Wooden and pewter dishes, platters and cups, earthen and brass pots, mortars and pestles, buckets, troughs, the fitting up of a dresser and a hearth and other like arrangements about the kitchen or larder, and fuel, i.e., wood and coal. Robert Spaigne and Laurence Travers, seem to have been the chief valets of the scullery.

Clerk of the spicery.—Spices of all kinds, sugar, confections, honey, almonds, dried fruits, wax worked and not worked, tallow candles, strainers, canvas, ink and quires of parchment, linen for the pantry, buttery, and kitchen, with some other miscellaneous articles. This clerk must also have answered for the Office of the chaundry, in which wick, soap, tallow, candles, and torches were provided and made. John Whytelock, probably the same as John del Chaundry, seems to have been the valet in charge (p. 78/16).

Clerk of the buttery.—Wine of various kinds, with casks and carriage, and its care generally. Also beer and barrels, and occasionally mead. Besides John Payne, esquire, Robert Jonson was in the buttery, and there must have been others.

Clerk of the pantry.—Bread, flour, corn, multure (i.e. the cost of grinding), canvas and bolting or sifting, sacks or barrels for the bread or flour, and the costs of making and baking bread. John Fysher was the chief baker (pp. 75, 80); but there were several others employed, besides a pie baker, and at Königsberg and in Venice pastry cooks, Hans Edeyne and Francisco.

Clerk of the marshalcy.—Hay, oats, the shoeing of the horses, saddles, and horse gear generally, transport of fodder and victuals on the reysa, purchase and care of horses. Besides Robert de Waterton, Thomas Toty acted as master of the horse on the journey in 1393 (p. 257), and Thomas Swylington and John Wilbram were two of the principal valets.

Clerk of the great wardrobe.—As Loveney, who filled this office, did not go abroad, it is likely that Kyngston himself answered for the expenditure under the titles purchase of Horses (p. 262); Alms and Oblations (pp. 116, 273); Wages (pp. 118, 264), and Belchere (p. 259), aided of course by those who actually spent the items, such as the chamberlain and the steward, who often sent in their voucher, "nunciante camerario," &c.

Silver vessels (p. 100) and metal kitchen vessels (p. 101, including a pair of stocks) were also on the first journey treated separately, and on the second journey Shipping Expenses (p. 278).

While Derby was still in England Loveney answered for his wardrobe expenses (pp. 34-36), but the chaundry and the spicery were at this date taken out of his office. There remain however many things in his sphere of responsibility which go beyond the modern idea of the word "wardrobe"—which, it may be said, is here out of place—but which accord with Fleta. Besides cloths and stuffs, silk, woollen, and linen, &c., and furs given out or purchased for the lord and his "family," and the making of the garments, the clerk of the wardrobe took cognisance of shoes and footgear; saddlery and the housing of horses; flags and banners, and heraldry; armour, including bows and arrows; all sorts of package for these various things; jewelry and goldsmith's ware; money spent at play (p. 263); and perhaps falconry; besides frequent travelling expenses. During the journeys John Dyndon (who in Loveney's accounts of 1391-2 is called "cissor robarum domini")* acted as clerk (pp. 88, 179, 257) while John Dounton was "custos armature" (p. 257, see index).

* D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 1, no. 2, fo. 2.

The Chamberlain answered for Gifts in 1390-1 (pp. 104, 113), and probably, though not so expressed, also in 1392-3 (p. 289).

The men who carried out these various offices, valets, grooms, or pages,[a] formed the bulk of the household, together with a few more to be pointed out, but from the accounts alone it is impossible to specify with certainty, except in a few cases, which names belong to the relative offices.

The two Henksmen or henchmen, Bernard and Henry Tylman[b] (in 1392-3 only). One of these went with Derby to Jerusalem.

The Minstrels.—Of these Derby had six in his regular pay all through 1390-91, two trumpeters, three pipers, one nakerer (player on the naquaire or nacaire, a kind of cymbal). In 1392 he also took six musicians, three trumpeters, and three pipers, different men, except perhaps John the trumpeter; but he sent them back to England at the end of September, only retaining one trumpeter, Thomas, who accompanied him on his journeys across Europe (p. 271). They appear as a kind of military band.

Their names were—

[b] Henks-men, Henx-men, or Hench-men were, it seems, minors, sometimes wards, boys or orphans of gentle family who were placed under the care of a king, noble, or gentleman to be brought up in his household, usually with their own special attendant; their wardrobe and other expenses being provided by their guardian. See "Household Ordinances," Soc. Ant., pp. 44, 45, "Edward II.'s Ordinances," Chaucer Soc., pp x., 17, § 25, "Babee's Book," p. ii., and "Notes and Queries," Ser. 7, iii., p. 312, where Canon Jackson prints an account of 1452, and ib. Ser. 8, iii., p. 104. The earliest instances of the word hitherto remarked are those recently pointed out from Wardrobe Accounts of 1378-9, 1400, 1420, &c. in "Notes and Queries," Ser. 8, vol. iii., pp. 389, 478. To which may be added, besides those in our text, another in Lovetey's Wardrobe Account for 14 and 15 Ric. II. (1391-2), where we have Bernard, Walter, and Yonge, Derby's henksmen. Their pay was 4d. a day, the same as that of valets of the chamber, and when on military service they had 6d. a day.[a]

Robert barbour in 1390–1 was probably his master's barber valet; and Nicholas and John leche, each named once in 1392–3, are the only mentions of any doctors.

Regarding the valets, on the first journey ten seem to have been properly valets of the chamber, paid 6d. a day during the reysa, 4d. ordinary pay; five were of less degree, receiving 4d. on the reysa, 3d. ordinary pay; ten were of less degree again, and generally classed as "gromes," receiving 3d. a day on the reysa, 2d. ordinary pay. It is not easy to distinguish so certainly the men on the second journey, but there appear to have been 20 valets at 4d. a day for a considerable part of the time.[b]

[a] They had gowns of russet, rayed with blood and tan cloth, in 1391. (Loveney's Wardrobe Accounts, D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 1, no. 2, fo. 4v°.) It may be re-called that the Lancasters owned Tutbury, where a large society of musicians or "minstrels" held a yearly court on 15 Aug., with sports, having a king and four assistants, whose object seems to have been to promote and encourage skill in good music in the five counties of Stafford, Warwick, Derby, Leicester, and Nottingham. John of Gaunt, in 1380, gave them a charter, with certain privileges over members of their profession. See Plot's Staffordshire, 1686, pp. 435-440. Perhaps Derby drew his band from these men.

[b] The upper valets appear to have been gentlemen of good family, though probably not, as in the days of Bracton, "the young heirs that were to be knighted, were comprehended under the title of Valetti," as Selden recalls; perhaps they were coming down a little in the social scale, though we see Chaucer both valet and esquire between 1367 and 1373 (Furnivall's Preface to "Edw. II.'s Ordinances," p. xii., Chaucer Soc.), for as Selden points out, under Statute 23 Henry VI., c. 14,

All the paid men from the highest to the lowest received extra wages on the reysa, and any officer employed on his lord's affairs out of court received higher pay for those days than when in court.

Money and Coinage.—Strictly accounting for the sums entrusted to him, showing loss and profit by exchange, as well as expenditure in the various countries through which Derby passed, Kyngston had frequent memoranda made on his accounts of the rate of exchange against English money. The summings up of the pages and heads of expenses are regularly reduced into money sterling on the first account, only occasionally so on the second. The English noble of 6s. 8d. was the standard coin of computation; the mark of 13s. 4d., money of account, was also sometimes used. Pounds, shillings, pence, halfpence, and farthings are the other English money used. In Italian states the ducat was the standard of computation. The following tables collect together the notes of names and values with the pages where they are to be found.[a]

Spain.—The gold florins brought from Arragon did not, in 1390-1, all realise the full value at first estimated, which caused the considerable loss of 8½d. on every mark English.

[a] Numismatists and manuals naturally concern themselves more with the actual coins than with the written signs of their currency; I have had considerable difficulty in identifying some signs in these accounts, and must beg indulgence if I have fallen into error. I beg to express my thanks for kind hints and assistance on these points to Dr. H. Dannenberg of Berlin, M. J. Delaville le Roulx, M. Prou of the Cabinet des Médailles, Paris, and Mr. C. W. C. Oman of Oxford.

Prussia.—The moneys of the Teutonic Order in these accounts are the mark, scot, shilling, pfennig (denarius), vierchen.

	With the noble at 24 scot, 9 pfennige	1d.

The vierchen only occurs twice, it was the quarter of a half-scot.[b] The scot is generally considered by German authorities to have been only a money of account.[c] Grunau, a chronicler of early in 16th century, records that it was struck by Winric von Kniprode (1351-1382), but gives conflicting statements as to its value, which, coupled with the fact that it has quite disappeared, led F. A. Vossberg to think that it was the half-scot of fifteen pfennige that was actually coined by Winric. Into the merits of the question we cannot enter here; but it may be remarked that many isolated small payments were made in the scot alone, which tends to show that it was a real coin, such as for belchere, p. 259/26, 29; alms, p. 117/2; oblations, p. 274/11; gifts to a servant, a tumbler and others, p. 109/5, 10, 14, to say nothing of numerous items in the general expenses in Prussia, e.g. pp. 174-177.

The Mark (Neumark).—Here were the mark, shilling, and penny (no scot); but the money was "moneta vocata f" (p. 187) exclusively used within the limits of the Mark. There is much difficulty in the explanation of this f., evidently a local designation. Dr. H. Dannenberg, the well known numismatist of Prussia, suggests (in which also Dr. Menadier, of the Cabinet of Medals at Berlin, concurs) that the marca denariorum of North Germany, or money really coined, in opposition to the uncoined lump-metal and money of account, was here designated. The mark being coined into smaller pieces, the pfennige or pence, the currency became known by the name of these coins, it was the "pfennige geld." And to the Englishman's ear the initial sound of this would be f. The question arises, however, whether this sort of money was confined to this part of Brandenburg; did not the rest of North Germany share in its diffusion? Blanchet[a] states that "in the 14th century the Margraves struck a great quantity of pfennigs," and Leitzmann[b] says that several towns in Brandenburg, as Drossen and Frankfort-on-Oder, purchased the right of striking the pfennig for ever, ("sogenannten ewigen pfennig,") which show that the coinage of this piece was actively going on in the latter half of the century in the margravate. But in this currency were there also shillings?

There seems to me another alternative; that the f. may betoken the money called Finkenaugen, which was coined at Salzwedel in the Mark. Schmieder says that this had been struck since 1314; a thin coin stamped on one side only, the edge was raised like a ring, with the stamp in the centre looking out as it were from an eye, hence the name Finkenaugen,[c] augenpfennig (eye-penny) or okelpfennig.[d] In the time of Charles IV., 18 finkenaugen were worth a Bohemian grossus; and in 1360 2 mark finkenaugen were worth 2½ Rhenish gulden. Besides Brandenburg this money had currency in Pomerania, Mecklenburg, and Dantzic. "Die marc.

finckenoug'," or as Hirsch says, "the mark F.," occurs in an account of 1409 from the Königsberg archives, quoted by Vossberg,[a] where it is stated to have been worth 6 scot Prussian. Here we can trace that the name spread from the pfennig upwards to the mark, and presumably to whatever other money, as the shilling, was connected with them. The Englishman knew what a Prussian penny was, and put it down as d., denarius; he knew that here in the Mark too were pence and shillings, &c. (though of less value), and put them down as d. and s., but this queer word which he very likely did not understand he never attempted to write in full, but carefully distinguished every item paid in such money by ff. (which simply means F.) or f.[b]

This identification is not wholly satisfactory because the mark f. in these accounts is worth 8 scot prus., not 6 scot (cf. with Prussian money); and because we have no reason why that particular money should only have been found current in the Mark by Derby's people, and not also in Pomerania and other parts of Brandenburg. But greater knowledge of local conditions of the time might explain this, and I venture to think that this may be the "moneta vocata F."

The gros siccet appears to be the gigliato struck by the Turkish emirs of Asia Minor, a Latin coin copying the gigliato of Naples and intended for circulation among both Christian and Turkish ports of the Levant. Analogous to the grossus, it was distinguished by the addition of sikket, the Arab word for coin or mintage. Another suggestion is that siccez = siculi, and that this was a name for the gigliati of the kings of Naples and Sicily, reges Siciliæ, or for the gigliati struck in Rhodes in imitation of them by Villeneuve (1319-1346). About this date two aspres = one gigliato (Schlumberger, "Num. de l'Or. Lat." p. 240); in our account 28 aspers = 18 grossi siccez (p. 289), showing the gros. sic. to be worth $1\frac{1}{2}$ aspers. The asper is a well-known Turkish coin. There is one instance of the half gros. sic. (p. 225, l. 20 and note), which may refer to the demi-gigliato.

[d] According to Schlumberger $1\frac{1}{2}$ gigliati or 3 aspres were worth 1 besant. "Numismatique," p. 240. P. Lambros states that excepting in Cyprus no besants were struck, and that in Rhodes and elsewhere the besant was only a money of account, "Monnaies inédites de G. M. de Rhodes," Paris, 1877, p. 9.

is here found in use at Venice, Verona, Pavia, and Milan (pp. 283/28, 288); it appears to be the Milanese picchione, worth 18 imperiali (or denarii), struck at Milan, and is referred to in proclamations of G. Galeazzo Visconti of 1391, and an ordinance for the mint at Pavia, 1400;[a] a name not well known, it is taken by Canon Dionisius to have been the same as the picciolo.[b] The sexino of Milan was worth 6 imperiali (see the same proclamations); there was, later, a sixain in Cyprus, first struck under King Janus (1398-1432).[c] The denaro imperiale was a Milanese coin dating from the twelfth century, commonly known by the second word only; the lira d'imperiali contained 20 soldi, each soldo 12 denari or imperiali.[d] The values in the accounts are—

There yet remain several matters of high interest in these accounts, to which attention should at least be directed; details concerning food, conveyance by land and water, dress, and many more. But this introduction has already outrun its limits, and the reader will consult his convenience by turning to the Glossarial Index, where the principal subjects of domestic economy, &c., are grouped, together with a few explanatory words, under such heads as Fish, Fruits, Meats, Spicery, Armour, Textiles, Games, Horses, Horse-gear, Shipping, Carpentry, Weights and Measures, &c., which will give some idea of the store of valuable material for the historian. Lists of prices of various articles, and of wages, might be drawn up, but these and other like omissions are now left to the care of the reader, who has the text before him.

The indices to Persons and Places give the means of further checking the itineraries and the conclusions arrived at in the foregoing pages. About a dozen place-names remain unidentified, in spite of all research. Three knights, Ecton, Elys, and Seinlatour, and Lord Robert Elkington, among the persons of upper rank, are little known, nothing could be found about them; the Tylman and Yonge families (henchmen) are worth further search; but future investigations about these and other names may prove more fruitful, especially if made among the contemporary records of the Lancasters.

A list of errata discovered as the work went on is prefixed, the reader is requested to correct them with the pen on the respective pages.

Rolls ed. vol. ii. pp. 197-98.—Dominus Henricus, comes de Derby, per idem tempus profectus est in Le Pruys; ubi, cum adjutorio marescalli dictæ patriæ, et cujusdam Regis vocati Wytot devicit exercitum Regis de Lettowe, captis quatuor Ducibus, et tribus peremptis, et amplius quam trecentis de valentioribus exercitus supradicti pariter interemptis. Civitas quoque, vocata Wille, in cujus castellum Rex de Letowe, nomine Skirgalle, confugerat, potenti virtute dicti comitis maxime, atque suorum, capta est. Namque qui fuerunt de familia sua primi murum ascenderunt, et vexillum ejus super muros, cæteris vel torpentibus vel ignorantibus, posuerunt: captaque sunt ibi, vel occisa, quatuor millia plebanorum, fratre Regis de Poleyn, inter cæteros, ibi peremptо, qui adversarius noster fuit. Obsessumque fuit castrum dictæ civitatis per quinque hebdomadas; sed propter infirmitates quibus vexabatur exercitus, Magistri de le Pruys et de Lifland noluerunt diutius expectare. Facti sunt Christiani de gente de Lettow octo, et Magister de Lifland duxit secum in suam patriam tria millia prisonum.

APPENDIX B.

Extracts relating to the expedition of 1392-1393.

John Capgrave, De Illustribus Henricis, p. 99.

Iterum autem, A.D. 1392, idem venerabilis dominus, adhuc vivente patre, mare transiit versus Prusiam, concomitantibus sibi, 25 July. ut dicitur, ferme trecentis viris. Et in festo Beati Jacobi Apostoli, navem apud Hecham, prope Lennam, ascendit; et felici navigio terram desideratam intravit. Ubi cum favorem dominorum provinciæ suo desiderio non sensisset amicabilem, relictis illis, Venetias applicuit, et deinde Jerosolimam. Ibi quoque Loca Sancta cum magna devotione veneratus est, pauperes Christi magna clementia recreabat, et quosdam captivos, multo dato pretio, ad terras fidelium secum reduxit.

Dignum autem duxi hic enucleare, per quas terras et per quos principes, ad optata littora pervenit. Totum enim hunc annum solemni peregrinatione expendebat: in quo quidem labore ita provide se suosque gubernabat, ut placabilis Deo, honorabilis regno, amicabilis quoque iis in quibus conversabatur, prædicaretur.

Nam de Prusia versus Hungariam, per Poloniam, aliasque provincias diversas, pertransivit, ubi, a rege Hungarorum honorabiliter receptus, magnis muneribus decoratus est. Deinde Dux Austri benigne sibi occurrit, viam simul et victualia condigno favore ministrans; et hoc per omnes magnates in dicta peregrinatione fiebat. Nam et dux Venetiarum cum galeis sibi per aquam occurrens, eum in proprium palatium suscepit, in Candiam, et in Rodis, ac in Jeru-salem conducens, totiusque peregrinationis suæ comes individuus extitit. Visitatis quoque Sepulchro Sancto et aliis locis sacrosanctis, ad Ciprum reversus est, honorifice ibidem a rege illius insulæ receptus et deductus. Apud Papiam quoque et Mediolanum cum duce hospitabatur, peregrinationem suam dulcissimo contubernio confortans. Comes enim Virtutum (nam et tali titulo tunc gloriabatur) ipsum ad castrum ubi corpus beatissimi patris Augustini quiescit, introduxit; quod, non sine magna contemplatione, dux noster amplexatus est. Ibi et corpus summi philosophi, necnon et theologi, Boëtii conspexit; ibi et corpus Leonelli, quondam ducis Clarenciæ, et avunculi sui, vidit tumulatum. Nam et sic moriens dictus Leonellus servis suis mandaverat, ut cor suum et ossa ad Conventum Clarensem, ordinis fratrum heremitarum Sancti Augustini in Anglia, transferrentur, carnibus suis cum visceribus coram sepulchro Doctoris eximii devote relictis. Et quoniam dominus Virtutum, dux scilicet Mediolanensis, offensus erat fratribus, propter quasdam canonicorum et Abbatis querelas, ita ut ad mille marcas multare eos meditaretur idem dux, aut occasione accepta, a loco illo ejicere, pius et venerabilis dominus iste Henricus pacis vias invenit, offensam pacavit, indignationem removit, et, dato fratribus suæ munificentiæ donario satis gratifico, ab eis recessit. Transactisque Transalpinis partibus, per regem Boëmiæ et duces Almaniæ, in Franciam devectus est; ubi non diu tardans, tandem ad terram suam nativam devenit.

John v. Posilge, Script. rer. Prussicarum, III., p. 182.—[1392] Item dornoch uf den herbst qwam der here von Lantkastel in das lant, und w lde gereyset habin mit den herrin. [a] Et in the MS., but pro seems to be the word intended, and necessary for the sense.

[b] This p evidently means pottle, not pint. Two quarts make a pottle, and the price of this item was thus 4½d. a quart.

[a] The money-box of old times was probably double, i.e., with two divisions like the modern cash box, hence it is spoken of as "a pair of packing coffers" with one lock. The French "d un" slips from the writer's pen naturally after the word "cofres." "Five pair of coffers" are one of the first purchases named. See before, p. 5 (fo. 1).

[b] This word may be scoks = shocks, a shock being a parcel of 60, generally employed in purchases in Prussia in these accounts (it will be noted that the vendor in this item bears a Teutonic name). The letters c and t in the MS. are indistinguishable. But further on, we undoubtedly have stokes, meaning fish, where scok is inapplicable. See p. 29, l. 18; p. 31, l. 32.

[b] Germany is hardly intended here, the mark of contraction is that usually signifying ra, and the word thus reads gramanland; besides, further on (fo. 39) we have a gift to the "herald de Almann*ia*." Prof. Prutz suggests that we should read Kermanland, i.e., Kerman, a province of Persia, whence turquoise and other precious stones were brought in the middle ages. [a] This contraction, used but a few times, can only mean English; the scribe perhaps misgave the familiar sterling at first while writing both foreign and English money. It was however soon resumed, en hardly occurs again.

[b] This is "cusis" in the MS., but carcoisis seems intended.

[a] That is Livland, like Nicole for Lincoln. The master of Livland, Wennemar of Bruggenoie, had joined the army: Scriptores rerum Prussicarum, II. p. 643 [P.]

[b] Christburg. Werner von Tettingen was commander at this time [P.]

[c] In this and the two instances next following of the word reis' the adjective is masculine in the MS., viz. totum, indicating reisum. But according to Ducange and the examples there given the right form appears to be reisa, as above printed. It is generally called le Riga elsewhere in the MS., the word le, however, cannot here be taken as inclusive of gender

[d] What this contraction stands for is doubtful, trajectum is suggested as likely in meaning, but it requires the long r to be taken as j, whereas the letter j in this MS. is always the short i. Prof. Pratz suggests tractum (p. 98).

[b] This contracted word is difficult to interpret, and I must leave it unsolved; primum suggested by Prof. Pluta is a quite inadmissible reading, owing to the shape of the l. The Prior was probably John de Tweng, well known as John of Bridlington, who died in 1379, and was afterwards canonized, a commission having been issued in 1386 to inquire into the miracles performed at his tomb. NOTES.

Pp. 1, 2, 143, &c. Richard de Kyngeston, archdeacon of Hereford from 1379 to 1404 (when he resigned). For the special occasions of his two years of travels abroad, and primarily for the wars, 1390 and 1392, Derby appointed the archdeacon his treasurer. Little is known about him, but from the tone and freedom of his letters written at Hereford to Henry when king, as to the Welsh troubles in 1403, extant in a Cotton MS., it would appear that he was on intimate terms with Henry and of some local value (Ellis, Original Letters, 2nd. Ser., I., p. 17; Hingeston's Letters of Henry IV., Rolls ser., i., p. 155). It was in 1402 that Henry IV. made him Dean of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, giving him custody and prebend thereof. He died in 1418 (Pat. 3 Hen. IV. p. 2, m. ii.; Rot. Par. iv., 346 b.).

Pp. 2, 4, 80, &c. Hugh de Waterton, knight, held the manor of Vgglee in Essex from Derby by the farm of 20 marks annually; which sum in 1392 he paid to the Earl while abroad with him (Levnthorp's accounts, 15 to 18 R. II., D. of L. records, cl. 28, bdle. 3, No. 5, fo. 4). We find him acting as Derby's receiver of monies in 1377-8 and 1381-2, and as his chamberlain in 1386 (D. of L. rec. cl. 28, bdle 3, Nos. 1, 3; and ib. bdle. 1. No. 1), in which last office he continues through 1390-1, and probably 1392-3, the years of our accounts. He had charge of Henry's children Philippa and John at Berkhampstead in 1402 (Mrs. Everett Green's Princesses of England, iii., 343). A letter about 1403 (July) as to the troubles in Wales desires his influence with the king to go to the rescue (Ellis, Orig. Letters, 2nd ser., I. 20), and there is one from Hugh de Waterton himself to his master on the same subject (Hingeston's Letters of Henry IV., Rolls Ser., i., p. 149). In 5 and 7 Henry IV. he was one of the king's council (Rot. Par. iii., 530*a*, 572*b*). He married Ellen daughter of Thomas Mowbray, and died in 1409.

Sir Hugh belonged to one of the oldest families of commoners in England, taking their name from Waterton, a small place in the Isle of Axholme, Lincolnshire. Hugh's cousin William, who married the heiress of Thomas Methley of Methley near Pontefract, had two sons Robert and John Waterton, who were both also in the intimate employ of Derby, and afterwards of his son Henry V. All three were eminent men, in positions of trust. For further details see History of the Isle of Axholme, by Rev. J. B. Stonehouse, 1839, 447-465; also Nicolas, Scrope and Gros. Cont. II p. 130. These belonged to the Axholme branch; another branch about Richard's reign settled at Walton Hall, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire, whence sprang in these latter days the fine naturalist and good man Charles Waterton, author of Wanderings in South America (died 1865).

Hugh Waterton had two daughters, Blanche, who in 1393 was wife to Robert Chalons, esquire, who served in the Reysa and received annuities and new year and other gifts with the rest of Derby's retainers in 1390-1 (pp. 107, 112; D. of L. cl. 28, bdle. 3. No. 5 fo. 7). Stonehouse speaks of him as Sir Robert Challons, and of his wife Blanche, in 1420; and Elizabeth, who married John ap Harry of Easton in Herefordshire (Stonehouse, p. 448). John ap Henry appears in Derby's accounts (p. 122) as receiving 20 days wages for himself and his archer for service in May, 1390.

Pp. 4, 13, 123. John Leventhorpe, esquire, was Derby's receiver general of monies arising from lands and estates, indeed to judge by his accounts still remaining he exercised the part of the Earl's general treasurer at home, giving account of important expenditure as well as of incoming receipts. (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, Nos. 4, 5, for greater part of four years 14-18 Ric. II.) He certainly was at Calais with Derby in May, 1390; but does not seem to have gone further abroad. The wages allowed him in 1391, for two years' official work were £6 13s. 4d. (ib. No. 4). Simon Baeke, however, was treasurer of Derby's household. On Henry's death in 1413, and on the death in 1422 of Henry V., Leventhorpe acted as executor to both kings, Rot. Par. iv., 6*a*, 172*b*); and in a petition of Anne, countess of Stafford, in 1422, regarding her share of the Bohun property (Henry's share of which formed part of the Duchy possessions), John Leventhorpe as one of the Council of the Duchy is stated to have charge of the charters and muniments (ib. p. 176*b*).

A century later one Nicholas Leventhorpe was in the service of the Duchy, being receiver of Pontefract and keeper of artillery in that castle. (Rot. Par. vi., 341).

Pp. 5, 7, 34. William Loveney was keeper of the great wardrobe to Derby, otherwise "clerk of his wardrobe"; a full and most interesting book of his accounts for the year from 13 May, 14 and 15 R. II. (1391-2) still exists, and another for 17 R. II. (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 1, nos. 2, 3). He does not seem to have accompanied Derby on his travels; in Kyngeston's accounts he only appears responsible for the "Garderobe in Anglia" (p. 34, 35). Officers under him were John Dynton "custos rerum domini," a valet of the wardrobe, and John Donnton, keeper of the armour, who received regular wages for service abroad and who must have taken his place for the expenditure abroad pertaining to his office. Loveney continued in the same office when Henry became king, who granted him for life the manor of Worton, co. Surrey (Rot. Par. iv., 67*a*, 238*a*). In 1401 with Erpingham, Hugh Waterton, and others he was warden of Thomas of Lancaster, the king's son; and in 1406 Henry made William Loveney, esquire, temporary treasurer to his daughter Philippa, Queen of Denmark, Sweden and Norway, during her voyage thither, and for her escort there and back (Rymer, viii., 237, 446).

Perhaps of the same family was John Loveney, who succeeded Richard Kyngeston as archdeacon of Hereford in 1405, and was appointed archdeacon of Salop in 1417. (Le Neve's Fasti, i., 480, 483.)

Pp. 8, 20, 124. William Elmham, knight, was on service with the Duke of Lancaster in Artois in 1373, and otherwise in the wars in France; also in Flanders with the Bishop of Norwich, where in 1383 he and others were convicted of having been bribed by the French (see Kervyn's Froissart, vol. 21, p. 137, and references in Index to Rolls of Parliament). Nevertheless he was, later, employed in several missions of trust among them being the journey in 1390 from Calais to Paris to get letters of safe conduct for Derby from the French king, accompanied by Derby's esquire (John Stokes, Thomas is an error, and both entries refer to the same journey). This journey is not dated, but was probably made early in the financial year, and as Elmham and Stokes did not themselves go to Prussia (shown by the absence of wages on this account) it seems likely that the three archers, whose wages extra curiam from 18 May to 7 June Elmham received from Derby's treasurer, were for his service from Calais to Paris, and that we here find the date of that journey indicated occupying part or the whole of the three weeks.

In September 1390 Elmham was one of the knights appointed to treat with the French commissioners "de attemptatis reformandis," and in October was sent to Aquitaine on the king's business. In 1391 he was again employed on affairs concerning the treaty with France (Gascon Rolls, 14 R. II., m. 4, 3, 1). He was probably from the same place in Norfolk as Thomas Elmham, the Benedictine who wrote the Life of Henry V.

John Stokes, "scutifer domini," who accompanied Elmham on his mission in 1390, seems to be the same as the "maister Johan Stokes, LL.D.," who was one of Henry IV.'s ambassadors to the king of Hungary in 1411 (MS. Cott. Vesp. F. 1, fo. 2), and is mentioned in a letter to Henry V. of 1419-20. There is a letter written by him to Henry V. from Heidelberg after the treaty of 1420 (Ellis, Original Letters, 2nd ser. i., p. 80; 3rd ser. i., p. 66); and the pages of Rymer (vol. ix.) show that he was employed in numerous embassies from Henry V.

P. 9, 23, &c. Robert Chalons, esquire, see note to Sir Hugh Waterton, p. 294.

Pp. 10, 108, &c. John Waterton esquire, brother to Robert, (see note, p. 294) was during the period of these accounts a constant attendant on Henry receiving regular wages, his employment being apparently connected with the marshalcy, so that he naturally in after years succeeded his brother as Master of the Horse to Henry V. He was present at Agincourt, and later on became comptroller of the royal household for Henry V and for his son. Died in 1430. (Stonehouse 472) A letter from Henry V. when Prince, about 1402, with news of his successes to the keepers of the marches of Wales was sent by "notre tres-chier escuier John de Waterton," who could confirm it (Ellis, Original Letters, 2nd series, 1827, vol. i. pp. 11-13).

Pp. 11, 15, &c. Robert de Waterton, esquire, was Master of the Horse to Derby, and appears in this and various capacities throughout these accounts. He received a regular annuity from Derby (see Leyntharpe's Accounts, 15-18 Ric. II, D. of L. records, cl. 28, bdle. 3, no. 5). In 1406, while acting as king's messenger, he was taken prisoner, and only set free on his brother John becoming hostage for him (Rot Par. iii., 605*a*). This is the same John Waterton, esquire, who is so frequently named in the present accounts, and who was evidently also attached to the household. Robert was employed in Flanders in 1401 (Fr. Roll, 2 Hen. IV. m. 4,; he appears as chief steward of the Duchy of Lancaster north of Trent in 11 Henry IV, and was one of that king's executors (Rot. Par. iii., 630*a*; iv., 5*a*, 75*b* &c.). Through the reign of Henry V. he had important employ, as ambassador and keeper of noble prisoners, &c, among others he kept the Duke of Orleans at Pontefract in 1417; he was Constable of Pontefract Castle, and was active till his death in 1424, 3 Hen. VI. In Sir H. Ellis's collection of Original Letters, 1st ser., vol. i, p. 6, is one from Robert Waterton to Henry V in 1420, just before the marriage to Katharine of France; reprinted in Stonehouse, History of the Isle of Axholme, where will be found a fuller account of this distinguished man, pp. 419-432.

P. 11, l. 11. Comte de Saint Pol. In 1390 the owner of this title was Waleran de Luxembourg, Comte de Ligny and de St. Pol in the Pas de Calais. He was prisoner in England (at first in the Tower of London) from February, 1375, till July, 1379 (Rymer, vii., pp. 58, 224), part of his ransom going to redeem Thomas Felton, taken prisoner by the French (ib. 265, the petition on Rot Par iii., p 250*a*, should be dated 1378-9, not 1388-9). While in England he fell in love with, and married Matilda, the young widow of Hugh Courtenay (son of the Earl of Devon, died 1374), daughter of Sir Thomas Holland and Joan of Kent, sister to Sir John Holland, and half sister to King Richard II., "the most beautiful lady in England." The story is told by Froissart, Kervyn's edition, ix., p 131 2. It was an incident at this lady's house (at Luchen in the county of St. Pol), followed by a duel for the honour of French knighthood, that was said to have given rise to the holding of the famous justs of St. Inglebert, in March-April, 1390 (Froissart, Johnes' ed. iv., 93 et seq; Kervyn's ed. xiv., 44-65, 105-151) Derby and his friends were present there little more than a month before the date of our text. Through King Richard, and through John de Beaufort's wife, who was a Holland (niece to Matilda), Derby was doubly connected with that family and thus with St. Pol. In 1391 the Countess was dead, as we find that Derby gave oblations at Westminster for the obit of the Countess St. Pol (D. of L. cl. 28, bdle. i., no. 2, fo. 5)*. Waleran was one of the French Ambassadors sent to England concerning the recent truce, in July, 1390, and again in June of the following year (French Roll, 13 R. II., m. 23, 14 R. II., m. 13; see further Kervyn's Froissart, vol. 23, p. 78). He married a second time, and died in 1415.

P. 14, l. 28. Senescallus Francie. Since the middle of the 12th century there had been no Steward of France, and the office as such did not exist in the time of Charles VI. (Anselme, Hist. Generalogique, vi., p. 37) though there were stewards of certain provinces (see Ducange). The officer intended here, however, was probably the maitre d'hôtel of the French king, who from his duties would be called steward by the English. Walsingham (Hist. Anglicana, ii., 216), speaking of the continuation of the truce arranged by Lancaster in 1391 and ratified 5 May 1392 by Richard II., says the "Seneschallo Francie" came over to England to take the king's oath. Turning to Rymer (vii., 717, 720) the actual documents say that the oath was taken in presence of "Tanguy de Chastemarle, chivaler, meistre del Hostiell" of the French king. Derby addressed him about two years before this incident, but the exact date is not given in the text.

P. 14, l. 30. De la Haven usque ad poppem stantem in le Ras. The haven at Calais, called at this time Paradis,† known later as "grand" and "petit" Paradis (E. Le Jeune, Hist. de Calais, 1880, p. 103), was partly enclosed by a long strip of bank parallel to the town, at the open end of which rose the castle of Rys-bank. Outside of this harbour was the open sea. On early maps two long parallel jetties project, one from the Rys-bank, the other from the town, protecting the mouth of the harbour. I have not found le Ras marked on any map of Calais, it cannot mean a race (Fr. raz) of water, as no ship would be placed to stand in a spot of rapid, contrary currents. It seems to mean the straits of Calais (pas de Calais), the ship (pippem = puppem, a ship) standing outside the harbour to be laden. The converse took place at Dover, where Derby and his men were conveyed in boats from the ship in the Roads to the Haven (p. 15, l. 21). It may be remarked, however, that in both cases "haven" indicates rather the dry land than water, perhaps used in a general sense it means the wharf. Taken thus, we may look for "le Ras" inside the harbour.

Pp. 15, 109, &c. Derby le Herald (whose name was John and probably Mowbray) accompanied Henry on his journey in 1390, and, as he received wages infra curiam, he must have remained abroad with him during the winter. When at Calais in May or June he was sent to France to seek a safe conduct for Henry, who intended to go to Barbary (see Introduction), for which he received a gift from his master, and, later on, another from the Duke of Lancaster (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, no. 2). From Königsberg he went with letters from Henry to Jagello, King of Poland, seeking the deliverance of two knights, taken prisoner, says Prof. Prutz, at the siege of Wilna; this journey was made between 23 December and 30 January, 1390-1, for which he received wages extra curiam (p. 108, 139). From Dantzic he went a second time about the end of March following (p. 111).

By Levnthorpe's accounts for 17 Rich. II. (1393), we find that "John Derby herawde" was paid on 26 Oct. for going to the King of Hungary, which perhaps refers to his heralding the visit of Henry to the King in the previous November on his way to Venice (cf. 195, l. 13; 285, l. 31); but more likely indicates a later mission.

On Henry's second journey, in 1392-3, we find his herald always called Mowbray, a John Mowbray is twice named (pp. 14, 201), so that he was probably the same as "Derby le Herald" of 1390. So important an official might well have a house at Calais, and his presence with Bucton and others at Venice making ready the galley before their lord's arrival, would impart authority to the party. His services were in constant requisition; for the greater part of the year he received 8d. a day, but 7½d. during the few weeks he was infra curiam (p. 267).

Pp. 17, 122. Hugh Herle, Derby's confessor (p. 133) and chaplain since at least 1376 (Beltz, p. 237), also in 1377 (account of Duke of Lancaster's receiver, D. of L. cl. 28, bdle. 3, No. 1, see extract in Furnivall's Trial Fore-words, Chaucer Society, 1871, p. 147), was Archdeacon of Durham in 1388 (Le Neve's Fasti, iii., 303); he accompanied the Earl on both journeys to Prussia, frequently acting as his almoner (17, 37, 116) receiving the same wages as a knight. Two others of the name, probably of the same family, were contemporary, Alexander de Herle was Archdeacon of Cleveland in 1387 (Le Neve), and a John de Herle clerk, going abroad in Feb., 1389, had as attornies Hugh and Alexander de Herle, both clerks, no doubt the two archdeacons (French Roll, 13 R. II., m. 8). There was a John Herle knight in 1402 (Rymer, viii., 255). A Robert de Herle was Captain of Calais several years in the reign of Edward III. (Chron. of Calais, xxxiii.).

P. 19, &c. John Norbury, esquire (occasionally called Northbury), was one of Derby's retainers, receiving an annuity (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, Nos. 4 and 5). He must have been high in service and trust, as he received the same wages as a knight, accompanying Derby on his first journey, in 1390, but not on the second. He, together with Rempston and Erpingham, was with Henry when he landed in England in 1399, and was recommended by the Commons for his services (Rot Par. iii., 553). Henry as king granted to him and his wife Elizabeth the Manor and advowson of Cheshunt (Herts), which should pass to their sons Henry and John,— Henry being the king's godson (Ib iv., 460). He was one of Henry's standing Council in 1403-4 (Ib. iii., 536*a*, 669*b*). In 1 Henry VI. (1422) he appears in a charter as that king's treasurer (Ib. v., 432*b*).

P 20, l 2. La Whithall nuque le Clat. I have been unable to find what places this paragraph refers to, whether in Boston or London. The well known Whitehall in London was in the fourteenth century called York Place, being the palace of the Archbishops of York, and therefore could not be here intended. "Whithall" seems to be the name of a house either belonging to Derby or used by him.

Pp 28, 138, &c. Ralph Staveley, or de Staveley, esquire. Staveley is a Manor in Derbyshire; and Radulph de Staveley, armiger, I found, plainly written, as receiving money in one of Leventhorpe's accounts (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, No. 5), but unfortunately after the text was printed off. Owing to the similarity of u and n, and the invariable use of u for v in Staueley in these accounts, I mistook the word for the more familiar Staveley, and it is so printed throughout.

There was a Sir Ralph Stauley in 1414, who was the fourth son of Sir John Stanley then deceased. On the other hand the Staveleys were an old Yorkshire family which still exists (Burke, Landed Gentry).

Pp. 23, 24, 37, 38. Chopchire.

This place is not to be found on the Ordnance Survey, or on other maps of Lincolnshire, old or modern, as far as I can find. Nor do I find mention of it in any record or local historian. It seems to be a local name, for the point outside the port of Boston whence ships in the 14th century could set sail, it was also, as the third mention shows, a place on terra firma—not merely a beacon or sand-bank on the shoaly coast—to which carts could be taken with further baggage to be put on board. The spot that answers to this description is Skirbeck, an ancient town or village on the bend of the river Witham going out from Boston. This place derived its name from an old brook, the Scire-bec, long since dry bed; but the name Skyrbeck being already fixed by the 14th century does not offer any help to the identification of Chopchire. The port of Boston was at this period in a flourishing condition, and the river channel must have been kept clear up to a high point to allow of the passage of the numerous foreign and other vessels entering.

Mr. W. H. Wheeler, C.E. of Boston kindly informs me that in the time of Henry IV. the navigation extended as far as Dog-dyke, several miles higher than Boston; but in the course of wide enquiries for his "History of the Fens of South Lincolnshire" he has not met with the name of Chopchire. On the outside coast, it has perhaps been washed away.

Pp 31, 51, 106, 119. William Willoughby or de Willoughby, knight (Willoughby, a manor in Lincolnshire). Le Sire de Willoughby appears frequently on the Parliaments of Richard II's reign as a trier of petitions and took part in several important incidents in the careers both of Richard and Henry, assenting to the imprisonment of the first, made a councillor by the last. He sent two archers to Calais in May, paid for by Henry, but did not go himself; he accompanied Henry afterwards to Prussia, receiving a good round reward for his work there (p. 106), but does not appear to have remained abroad through the winter, at least not attached to Henry's household. He formed, however, part of Henry's paid retinue throughout his travels in 1392-3.

P. 34, l. 25. Domino de Seynpe de France. Jean, sire de Sempy or Saint Py, belonged to a family of Picardy (Sempy is a village in the Pas de Calais), was captain of Artois in 1370, and took a prominent part in much honourable service for his king and country during the next twenty years. He and the Comte de St. Pol were eminent French leaders at the Battle of Rosebecque (against the Flemings) in Nov., 1382. He was chamberlain to the Duke of Burgundy, and he was one of the three French knights who threw open the jousts of St. Inglebert to foreigners in March and April, 1390; "companion in arms of Maréchal Boucicaut, and one of the most valiant knights of his time" (Delaville le Roulx, France en Orient, i., 235). He died before 1398, leaving no children, his brother Robert becoming his heir. (Partie inédite des chroniques de St. Denis, ed. par le baron J. Pichon, 1864, pp. x., xi; P. Roger, Noblesse et Chevalerie du Comté de Flandre, d'Artois et de Picardie, 1843, p. 154-157).

Eustache Deschamps the poet, friend and contemporary of Chaucer, wrote a "balade" on the death of "Le bon prodomme et chevalier Sampy," who must have been the Sire Jean. (Œuvres de E. Deschamps, Soc. des anciens textes Francais, tom. I., p. 88). The precise date of his death is not yet ascertained.

Pp. 35, 126, &c. Peter Bucton (also in other documents Peter de Bukton), knight, and steward of Derby's household (senescallus). He had Robert Burton for his esquire (p. 53, and p. 303). The poet Chaucer, who evidently was on familiar terms, addressed to him "the counseil of Chaucer touching mariage, which was sent to Bukton," a cynical poem written, Prof. Skeat thinks, towards the close of his life (Minor Poems, 204, 390, 392).

Sir H. Nicolas says that Bucton was a native of the north of England, living from 1350 to 1412, and that he served against both the Scots and the French, and notices several civil offices undertaken by him (Scrope and Grosvenor Controversy, ii., 466).

On 4 May, 1390, he took out letters of attorney for going abroad (French Rolls, 13 R. II., m. 12), though we find that he was again in England riding on his lord's affairs in June and July (p. 126, note). He was abroad with Derby throughout his second journey (p. 265). He was escheator of the county of York in 1397. Later, Henry as king granted him the office of chirographer of the Common Bench, which he was holding in 1402 (Rot. Par., iii., 496 a); and he was Mayor of Bordeaux in 1411 and 1412.

P. 35 Domus Orwell extra Bysshopsgate. It would be interesting to know what house this was, visited by Derby, whether it belonged to the Lancasters. His father's palace of the Savoy was burnt by the mob in 1381: was this another house to which the family had resort? I find no mention of it in Stow, Riley, or Loftie. Dr. R. R. Sharpe of the Guildhall kindly informs me that among the City records there is a conveyance to Lancaster in 1377 of a house near Thames Street, formerly belonging to Alice Perers, but he does not find Orwell House. Mrs. Everett Green, 'Lives of Princesses', iii, 310, says that Derby had a large town residence in Bishop-gate Street, with a garden, but I have been unable to trace her authority for the statement.

P. 36 note. Lord Thomas Percy was younger brother to Henry Percy, first Earl of Northumberland. He was made Earl of Worcester in 1397, and was beheaded soon after the battle of Shrewsbury in 1403.

Pp. 38, 100, &c. Thomas Swinford, knight, was the son of Sir Hugh de Swinford, of Lincolnshire, and Catherine (de Roet) his wife, and grandson of another Thomas. His father died abroad on 13 Nov., 1371, at the age of 31, when Thomas was but four years old. (Inq. Post Mortem 35 Ed. III., pt. 2, no. 62; 46 Ed. III., no. 55). Catherine Swinford had performed various services to Blanche late Duchess of Lancaster, Derby's mother (d. 1369) for which the wardship of her son's lands was granted her by the duke. (Beltz, Knights of the Garter, 134 note.) She afterwards resided at Beaufort, a Castle in Anjou belonging to the Lancasters, where she bore four children to the Duke, who married her in 1396 and had them legitimated in 1397, by the name of de Beaufort. John the eldest, who would be about 15 in 1380, when he joined the Barbary crusade starting under the Duke of Bourbon on 1 July, appears to be referred to in the text among the expenses of the return to England (p. 100, l. 3); as the unsuccessful crusaders returned to Europe at the end of September, Beaufort may have joined his half-brothers Derby and Swinford in Germany after the Reysa, or later in England. He was in Lithuania in 1394 (Wigand v. Marburg, Script. rer. Pruss. II., p. 653).

The connection of Thomas Swinford (who was nearly the same age as Derby), with the Lancasters seems to have been close. There is a charge (p. 31, in Kyngston's account for the expenses of bringing two of Derby's horses from Kettlethorpe, one of Swinford's Lincolnshire manors, to Bolingbroke. Duke John (who in his will, 1397, calls him "mon tres chere bachelere") gave him an annuity of £20; in the accounts of Whittely, his receiver general, for 15 Rich. II., Thomas Swinford's name stands next to that of John Beaufort (D. of L. cl. 28, bdle. 3, no. 2). This was the year following that of Derby's Prussian expedition. Swinford was with Derby at Calais in May, 1390, afterwards accompanying him on the Reysa and remaining with him throughout the year; he received the same pay as Baston and Hugh Waterton, besides finding an archer infra curiam at Calais, and a valet on the Reysa. He did not go with Derby on his second journey. According to Sir J. Ramsay (Lancaster and York, i. p. 22) he was Henry's instrument in procuring the death of Richard II. in Pontefract Castle, where he was at the time. He was sent conjointly with others on several important missions of treaty in France and Flanders in the years 1405-1410 (Rymer, viii., 391, 441, 452, 480, &c.). Some doubt having been cast on his legitimacy, he obtained in 1411 letters patent clearing his name, for the purpose of inheriting property in Hainault left him by his mother Catherine the late Duchess, who died 10 May, 1403. The seal of arms which he, his father, and ancestors had borne was annexed to this curious document (Pat. 13 Hen IV., pt. i. m. 35). He died in 1432 4. (See Sir Harris Nicolas in Excerpta Historica, p. 152; Archæologia, xxxvi., p. 267; Archæol. Jnl., xxi., p. 274.)

Pp. 39, 105. Domenus de Bourcer. The Lord here intended seems to be Sir John, second Lord Bourchier, K.G., a man of high military reputation and service in Parliament and Council, from the siege of Calais in 1346 till near the close of his life in 1400. He himself did not join Derby's company (he was about 60 years of age), but one of his men the (the valet was probably an archer) was at the siege of Vilna, and was the first to receive Derby's flag to be planted on the wall (p. 105). Walsingham relates that "qui fuerunt de familia sua primi murum ascenderunt, et vexillum ejus super muros . . . . . posuerunt" (Hist. Angl. ii., 198), words which, clearly pointing to an Englishman for the time in Derby's service, put it out of the question that a French lord Boursier might be referred to in the text. Bourchier was made vicegerent of Flanders and governor of Gant in 1384; if he had a house at Dantzig, according to the text, p. 39, his travels extended further than is commonly known.

Pp. 49, 131. Sir Thomas Erpingham, knight, a distinguished man, belonged to a Norfolk family, was born in 1357, and died in 1428 (Liber de Antiquis Legibus, Camd. Soc. ed. T. Stapleton, Pref. pp. clxxvii, clxxix, note). He went to Spain with the Duke of Lancaster in 1386 (see letters of attorney in Rymer, vii., 508); accompanied Derby* on both his journeys to Prussia in 1390 and 1392, and was with him on his landing in England to take the Crown (Rot. Par. iii., 453*b*). We find Erpingham Constable of Dover Castle in 1402 (Collins, Peerage of England, v., p. 493), Subchamberlain in 1400, and Steward of the king's household in 1404 (Rot. Par. iii., 476, 639*b*). In 1421 we find him "a myghty and a gret supportour" of Walter Aslak, one of the enemies of William Paston the justice (Paston Letters, ed. Jas. Gairdner, vol. i., Introd., xxiv, 13-17). See further, Nicolas, Scrope and Grosvenor Controversy, ii., 194.

* Lancaster gave Erpingham 360 florens of Arragon (by warrant dated Pontefract, 10 August 1392), towards his second journey to Prussia (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, no. 2); he was there infra curiam in September (p. 265).

P. 50, 139. William Pountfreet or Pontfret was Derby's clerk of the kitchen, called clericus (pp. 103, 155) and probably in orders; he is generally styled dominus, no doubt as a complimentary title, being at the head of an important department, just as the cook was "Maister William cook." No mention is found of him in general history, and the comparatively low rate of his wages (6d. a day) shows that his rank was not high. He is named in Leventhorpe's account for 16th Rich. II. as having paid for the freightage of a ship with Derby's wardrobe, &c. from Dantzic to Hull (D. of L., class 28, bdle. 3, No. 5, fo. 5 v°, see before p. lxi). He accompanied his master on both journeys.

Pp. 51, 123, &c. Ralph Rochford, who is mentioned as one of the sick on the Reysa, apparently received the pay of an esquire in 1390-1 and in the autumn of 1392, but in April, 1393, he is styled knight, and appears to have received knight's pay thenceforward.

When in 1386 armour and horses were needed for arming against the French, Ralph Rochford, knight, was one of those appointed to make proclamation to keep down the prices in the parts of Holland and Lincolnshire (Rymer, vii., 546).

A Ralph de Rochford, knight, was sworn among others in Lincolnshire to support the Lords Appellants in 11 Rich. II. (1387); there were also two John de Rochford (one knight, one burgess) sworn on the same occasion (Rot. Par. iii., 401*a*). An annuity for attending on the king's person was given by Henry VI. in 1433 to Ralph Rochefort, knight, when he must have been over sixty, if he were the same (Ib. iv., 467).

P. 53. Robert Burton acted as esquire to Sir Peter Bucton the Steward; Kyngeston states too that he helped him to write his book, i.e., the book of accounts (p. 117); while to add to his manifold expenditures he performed the offices of deputy-clerk of the kitchen and of the poultry from October 19 to November 30, 1390 (p. 103 l. 27, and cf. pp. 62–65).

P. 53, l. 18. Capellam sancte Katerine. The place, apparently visited by Derby and his two chief officers, is identified by Prof. Prutz with Arnau, the church of which was dedicated to St. Katherine and was a place of pilgrimage.

Pp. 53, 88, 142, 143. John de Loudeham, erroneously printed Londeham in the text, of Walton in Derbyshire, was the son of Sir John Loudham the elder, of Nottinghamshire, &c. (who died in 1388). He went to Prussia and was on the Reysa with Derby, but died early in the expedition, "defunctus in partibus de Lettowe," his body being conveyed to Königsberg. From an inquisition post mortem which was taken in the third week of Feb. 1393-4 (first week in Lent, 17 Rich. II., No. 36), we find that he died on Sunday, 28 August, 1390, aged 25, leaving his sisters Isabella and Margaret his heirs. This agrees with the date in our text (p. 51, l. 11) of the Sunday when "the battle with the Pagans," was fought in which he must have been slain, i.e. the battle on the banks of the Memel in which the combined forces of the Marshall and Derby gained the day over Skirgal (see also John of Posilge, Script. Rer. Pruss. iii., 165).

The chronicler Wigand von Marburg states that "quidam miles Johannes de Lutam" was killed on approaching Wilna; he evidently intends Loudham, misplacing the date by a few days.

Loudham seems to have mortgaged his services to Derby for a loan of £50, part of which was taken out after his death in the value of his two horses—"trotters"—and saddles. No wages are entered as paid to him.

There was also another Sir John Loudham, of Suffolk, who was retained by the Duke of Lancaster for life, and went to Spain with him in 1386 (when he was 34 years old), but when he died is not found. (Nicolas, Scrope and Grosvenor Controversy, ii., p. 175.)

P. 86, Mende, 162, 176, 181, le Mount. Prof. Prutz believes these both indicate Münde, a place at the mouth of the Vistula, to-day Weichselmünde. The first is the nearest phonetic shape of the word, and was used by the scribe of the first accounts. Derby went thither by water from Dantzic; and on the second journey some of his people were housed there (181).

P. 98, l. 21. Abbot of Thornton. Thornton-upon-Humber was an old Augustinian House, lying between Boston and Bolingbroke, a convenient place to hire an extra cart; the abbot in 1390 was Thomas de Gretham.

Pp. 101, 108, &c. John Dalyngryg or Dalyngrugge appears by the rate of his wages to have been an esquire when he first joined Derby's retinue in 1390, receiving 8d. a day infra curiam, and 12d. a day extra curiam on the Reysa, i.e. up till the end of October. The knights on the Reysa received 2s. a day, but only 1s. from 1 Nov. till April 30; Dalyngrugge however seems to have been promoted after the siege of Wilna, as he is called dominus and receives wages equal to the knights during these last five months. Sir John Dalyngrugge was knight for Sussex in several Parliaments of Henry IV. and Henry V., and on Commissions of Sewers between Hastings and Bexley (Collins, Peerage, ed. 1779, viii., 99, 100, 104). In 1406 he was one of a Committee on the Safety of the Seas. (Rot. Par. iii., 569.)

According to Nicolas Sir John was son of Sir Edward Dalyngrigge, and made his will in 1417 (Scrope and Grosv. Cont. ii., 371).

P. 106, l. 11, 131, l. 17. Thomas de Rempston (erroneously printed Kempston in the text) was one of the knights having seen much military service who joined Derby for the period of the Reysa of 1390, in which he held the honourable office of Derby's standard-bearer. He did not go on the second journey of 1392. When Henry landed at Ravenspur in 1399, Rempston was one of the "vaillantz chivalers" who accompanied him (Rot. Par. iii., 553*a*); in 1400 he was Steward of the king's household; in July, 1401 he was made Admiral of the West and a keeper of the truce with France, in the following year Admiral of the South and West. He was drowned at London Bridge while attempting to row against a dangerous tide on 31 Oct., 1406. (French Roll, 2 Hen IV., m. 5; Rot. Parl., iii., 512*a*, iv., 320*a*; Nicolas, Scrope and Grosv. Controversy, ii., 190.)

P. 107. Duke of Gloucester. Thomas of Woodstock, sixth son of Edward III., married Eleanor eldest daughter and co-heir of Humfrey de Bohun, in whose right he was constable of England. He was created Duke of Gloucester in the 9th year of Richard II. He was thus uncle and brother in law to Derby, whose wife was Mary, Bohun's other daughter and co-heir.

P. 108. Janico, or Janico Dartache elsewhere, seems to have been a trusted esquire messenger, receiving higher pay for taking letters from Derby to England in 1390 than any other except Lancaster Herald, perhaps they contained the news of the first successes at Wilna. In Dec. 1392, the Duke of Lancaster sent him to his son at Venice in order to cash the money transmitted to Derby through Alberti and Dyne of Florence, for in Whittleby's accounts we find "Janico Dartache" esquire named as a person who might receive money at Venice as Derby's attorney (see before, p. lv. note), and in the same account a payment is made by warrant dated London, 4 Dec., 1392, to "Janico Dartache, scutifero, eunti versus partes de Venys domino comiti Derbye." (D. of L., cl. 28, bale 3, No. 2.)

P. 109, l. 2. Episcopus de Samland. The bishop of Samland, a northern province of Prussia, having his seat at Konigsberg, from 1387 to 1395 was Henry II. Kuwal. About the gift which he sent to Derby in Konigsberg, "j tabula commensali de Prucia" there may be some difference of opinion. Professor Prutz says that it cannot mean a specially Prussian table to eat at (Festtisch), but thinks that it indicates a table on the flat of which there was a map of Prussia inlaid in wood. (Rechnungen, p. 191, note 1). The learned professor does not give any reason for this conjecture, which appears to ignore entirely the word commensalis. Tabula in the fourteenth century, besides a wooden board or broad plank, sometimes signified a cloth (Ducange), and it may be that the bishop sent a fair linen cloth made in Prussia, to cover the festive board of the foreign prince. Cloths were used at the tables of rich men, the washing of the "mappas mule" (e.g. p. 85, l. 30) several times mentioned shows that Derby carried this habit with him; and we have "pannum lineum de Prucia" bought, p. 89, l. 15; so that such a gift was possible.

There does not, however, seem any difficulty in believing that a dining table from Prussia, such as a great man with his guests would use (probably a broad board with trestles) should have been bestowed. Derby took a "tabula commensalis" with a pair of trestles on the reysa (p. 49 l. 18); and when he went to Danzig one of the items of expenditure was for eight great boards (tabulis) "pro tabulis commensalibus in aula et in camera," where the same phrase is used (p. 75 l. 15).

P. 111, l. 32. Bryan de Stapleton, knight, was the eldest son of the famous Sir Bryan de Stapleton, who was the first Bryan of his ancient house, bearing his mother's name. The father was of a Yorkshire family and took part in distinguished service for upwards of forty years, from the siege of Calais 1346, onwards. He died 25 July, 1394, and in September of that year Derby paid for masses for his soul (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 3, No. 5). But his eldest son died before him, (Inquis. Post Mortem, 18 R. II., No. 36), and Derby paid the Dominicans of Dantzic to celebrate mass for his soul about the new year, 1390-1 (Nicolas has, it seems erroneously, dated his death in 15 R. II., Scr. and Gr. Cont., ii., p. 289). Little is known about this son save that he took out letters of attorney to go to Spain in 1386.

P. 112, l. 3. Guido Bryan, miles, of Walwayn in Pembrokeshire, but sprung from an old Devonshire family, was long one of Edward III.'s valets. He was at the taking of Calais in 1346 (Add. MS. 6298, fo. 314), was made Knight of the Garter by Edward III. and was one of the lords appointed by Parliament in 1381 to enquire into the governance of the king's household (Rot. Par. iii., 101a; Rymer vii., 250). His name frequently appears in Rymer as occupying important positions of trust, the latest being in 1385. He died on 17 August, 1390, at the age of about 90 years (The Black Prince, ed. H. O. Coxe, Roxburghe Club, p. 349; Nicolas, Scrope and Grosv. Cont., ii., 245-6). His eldest son, also Guy Bryan, died in 1386, aged about 32. His second wife was a member of the Grandison or Graunson family in England. The best account of this famous knight is given by Nicolas, 245-255.

P. 114, l. 34. Reynepot, a knight of France. This was Regnier or Rénier Pot, maître d'hotel to Jean sans Peur, Comte de Nevers, son of Philippe le Hardi, Duke of Burgundy, and chamberlain to the duke. He accompanied the Comte de Nevers on the crusade in aid of Hungary in 1396, and was among the prisoners taken at the disastrous battle of Nicopolis (Delaville le Roulx, France en Orient, 1886, i., p. 286, ii., pp. 83, 91, 94; Kervyn's Froissart, xxii., p. 383). His name is among those who received a houpelande, the French king's livery, on 1 May, 1400 (Douet D'Arcq, Pièces inédites, i, 164).

P 116, ll. 22, 23. Ad Sanctam Annam. The chapel of the Order in the castle at Marienburg was dedicated to St. Anne; Derby was at this place on 13 Feb. (p. 71).

Ib. l. 14. Apud sanctum Georgium. This appears to be a church in Königsberg, at which oblations were given on Derby's leaving that city, Feb. 9 (cf. pp. 167, 67).

P. 118, l. 9; 122, l. 29 Sir William Bagot himself is not recorded as receiving wages, nor is he entered among the knights on the Reysa; he did not therefore accompany Derby in person; but he sent 10 valets to Calais in May 1390, probably intended for the Barbary crusade (see Introduction). We find various mentions of William Bagot, who with Bussy and Green was on Richard's Council for many years, on the Rolls of Parliament (see also MS. Cleop. F. iii., fo. 80), in 1393 he was concerned in a fray in Warwickshire, where he had a house at Coventry; in 1397 under the king's orders he was concerned in the murder of Thomas, Duke of Gloucester, at Calais (Ramsay, Lancaster and York, i., xlv., 7, 8); in 1399 he was one of the four king's councillors who managed the affairs of the kingdom under the Duke of York during Richard's absence in Ireland, and on the landing of Henry was the only one of these who escaped with his life. Having been apprehended in Ireland and examined in October 1399 he was left in the Tower, and the next year the Commons petitioned that his lands and possessions should be restored to him. In 1402 he was appealed against by John Bemyngton of Walmash near Coventry. He and his wife Margaret were dead before 1421 (Rot. Par. iii., 326*b*, 478, 484; iv., 152).

Pp. 122, 139. Thomas Hasleden, esquire, of Steple Morden, co. Cambridge, appears as steward of Soham manor in the same county, Duchy property, in Leyntborpe's accounts, 16 Rich. II. He was the son of Christopher Hasleden and was born 1322. He was comptroller of John Duke of Lancaster's household, and his retainer for life (Nicolas, Scrope and Grosv. Cont. ii., 173).

P. 123. Thomas Stokes appears to have been an esquire, paid at an unusually high rate extra curiam, who also provided an archer during the three weeks' stay at Calais, May 9 to 31. The mention of his name on p. 20 must be an error for John Stokes, who was away with Sir Wm. Elmham at Paris, their expenses being paid independently (pp. 8, 20). That there were two Stokes', and that it was John, not Thomas, who accompanied Elmham is shown by the fact that no wages are entered for Elmham or for John Stokes except the large payment £13 3s. 0d. for the expenses of both. Elmham provided three archers extra curiam 18 May to June 7 (p. 124); if they were part of his following, and if this was the date of his journey to Paris, the existence of the two Stokes is certain. The point is of little importance except as connected with the date and motives of the Paris journey. See note to Elmham, p. 295.

P. 131. John Loreyn was one of the five lords who received knight's pay for the Reysa but I have not been able to identify him. He seems to have been the heir of John de Lovein, and a minor at his father's death, as his lands were granted to Lord Burghersh about 1346 to hold till he should come of age (Beltz, p. 45). There was a Nicholas de Loveyn, who was lord of Bristow, co. Surrey, in the 44 Edward III (Collins, Peerage, ed. 1812, viii., 270) whose daughter Margaret died in 10 Henry IV.; whether John belonged to this family I cannot say.

P. 131. Sir John Gybbethorpe was one of the deponents in the Scrope and Grosvenor cause in 1386 but Sir H. Nicolas was unable to find his name in pedigrees of the Gibthorpe family in Lincolnshire or to identify him. He is here among Derby's military company in 1390-1, with the pay of an esquire, and seems to have served under John of Gaunt in Spain (Nicolas, ii., 225.)

P. 131. Richard Goldsburgh, knight, was one of those sworn to support the Lords appellant in Lincolnshire in 1387 (Rot. Par. iii., 401*a*); and he is mentioned in an inquisition in 1403 at Newcastle-on-Tyne. (Collins, Peerage of England, ed. 1812. i. 459.) In 1410 he was in a commission of array for the West Riding of Yorkshire against the Scots (Rymer, viii., 640.) He seems to have joined Derby in 1390 only for the Reysa.

P. 138. John Malet, knight, appears in the list of annuities paid by Derby (through Levnthorpe) for several years; after 18 Rich. II., however, the annuity ceases, because, as a side-note informs us, he is dead—"cesset ista annuetas quia mortuus est predictus Johannes" (D. of L. cl. 28, bdle. 3, Nos. 4 and 5). He accompanied Derby, on his first journey and was with him in Königsberg at the New Year, when he received a large gift, (p. 112), but does not appear to have gone on the Reysa.

P. 150. Prior Sancti Johannis. The grand-prior of the English langue of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem at this time was John de Redington (1381-1399); and it seems probable that he, rather than the grand-prior of Venice (of the Italian langue) upon whom Derby could have no claim, supplied this contribution towards the expenses of the second journey. The account of Robert de Whitteby for 17 R. II., which would probably settle this question, unfortunately does not appear in the calendar of existing records of the Duchy. Redington and Bucton the steward made the agreement for the galley which took Derby from Venice to Jaffa and back again (p. 279; see Introd. lviii), and the Prior seems to have accompanied him, and to have been sent with Granson on a mission to the King of Cyprus at Nicosia (p. 226). It will be remembered that the seat of the order at this time was in Rhodes, the ambitious and able Heredia being Grand Master (1376-1396).

John of Redington had already in 1386 been charged as special ambassador by Richard II. with the treating of affairs in Cyprus and Rhodes, and thus would be by his knowledge of those countries and their diplomatic relations a valuable guide for Derby. (French Roll, 9 R. II. m. 26, 5 Feb., printed by Mas Latrie, Hist. de l'Ile de Chypre, tom. II. pt. i. p. 401).

P. 150, l. 20. Aquileia, the ancient Roman city to the south of Friuli, was governed by a Patriarch from the sixth century, who in the tenth century had also obtained jurisdiction over Friuli. The Patriarchs later transferring their residence to Udine, they naturally became also known as Patriarchs of Friuli. From 1387 to 1394 John Sobieslaw, a son of the late and brother of the reigning Margrave of Moravia, was Patriarch, having been translated from the bishopric of Olmütz. He was killed at Udine in 1394. (F. Ughelli, Italia Sacra, v., 116, 117.)

Pp. 158, 179, &c. Odo or Otto, familiarly Otes, third of the name, Sire de Granson (Granson, a castle and town near the lake of Neufchâtel), had rich possessions in Savoy and Vaud. He married in 1365, was at the siege of Rochelle, 1372, and at the defence of Cherbourg in 1379, and appears to have been several times in England, where he had numerous relations, and where a whole branch of his family was settled * (Louis de Charrière, Dynastes de Grandson, Tableau iv. a, cited by Ar. Piaget in Romania, xix., p. 238; see also Beltz, p. 176). He succeeded to his father's estates in 1389. In 1391 Amé VII., Count of Savoy, was poisoned, Granson became, as it appears unjustly, implicated; and, after an inquest, all his estates and property were, in 1393, confiscated. Meanwhile Granson had gone to England, perhaps early in 1392,† for we find that he accompanied Derby on his second voyage to Prussia in July of that year, a cabin in the ship being built for the accommodation of himself, Lord Willoughby, and others. Payments were made for short sojourns made by him at Königsberg and Dirschau (259). Passing through Stolpe, Pomerania, in September, he paid for Derby's safe conduct from the Duke there, and was with him also in Cyprus about the middle of February (226).

He received wages as infra curiam, by the grant of Derby and the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster, at higher rates than any other knight of Derby's company, viz. 3s. 4d. and 5s a day (the usual rate being 12d. a day), from the 12 August, 1392, till 31 May, 1393 (p. 264); about this latter date he probably went to Burgundy, at which court, Piaget says, he passed two years (Rom. xix., p. 243), for Walter Juteburgh was sent by Derby from Avigliano, where he was on the 22 May on his way homewards through Italy, "to Otes Granson in Burgundia" (p. 246). On 18 Nov., 1393, after Derby had returned to England, Richard II. granted him a pension of £126 13s. 4d. In 1396 he returned to Vaud, but being again accused he was killed in a duel, 7 August, 1397 (Piaget, 247).

Some time before his father's death he received annuities from John of Gaunt; in 1377-8 he had £33 6s. 8d. (see Furnivall's Trial Fore-words, Chaucer Society, 1871, pp. 123, 148); in 1391-2 he had 100 marks or £66 13s. 4d. as annuity from the same nobleman (D. of L. records, cl. 28, bdle. 3, no. 2). Granson appears to have been not only a soldier and a courtier, but a poet; Chaucer calls him the flower of the poets of France—"flour of hem that make in France"—and translated

* Sir Guy Bryan married a Granson or Grandson. A century before this time one Otto Granson was warden of the Channel Islands under Edward I.

† In Loveney's accounts for the year ending 13 May, 1392 (14 and 15 Ric. II.), there was given to a servant of Otes Granson presenting Derby with a courser, 13s. 4d. (D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 1, no. 2, fo. 19). This was before the second journey to Prussia.

a ballad from his French, calling it the Compleynt of Venus (Skeat's edition of Chaucer's Minor Poems, 1888, p. 206, 392, 395). He is also often referred to by Christine de Pisan and other French writers (Piaget, 237, 442).

There was also a "bastard Graunsom" in Derby's company, who was paid at the same rate as the esquires (see Index).

P. 167, l. 1, p. 273, l. 25. Sepultura Hans et famuli sui. John of Posilge, the historian of the Teutonic order, narrates that Lancaster (meaning Henry) came into Prussia in 1392 intending to join the knights on an expedition; and that, in Dantzic, his people killed a certain Hannus von Tergawisch, of the Witkop family, from the country (Script. Rerum Pruss., iii., p. 182), after which Henry withdrew from Prussian "ungereyset." Prof. Prutz identifies this man with the Hans of our text, and points out that Henry made due reparation; through his chaplain Herle arranging with the rector of the chief church, Marienkirche, of Dantzic for the burial of Hans and his servant (who must have been killed with him) at considerable expense, besides giving oblations and distributing alms to the poor at the funeral. The incident does not appear to have affected Henry's action, as he continued his journey to Königsberg.

P. 191, l. 8. Cum Rege Bemie. The King of Bohemia was Wenceslas, son of the Emperor Charles IV. of Luxemburg, to whom he succeeded in both dignities in 1378. Owing to his disorderly reign he was deposed from the empire in 1400; in Bohemia he tolerated the Hussites; died in 1419. Sigismund, King of Hungary (1386-1437), was his younger brother. Their sister Anne was the first wife of Richard II. of England (married 1382) and now queen; consequently Derby was a family connection. Bedeler, where Derby paid him a visit of three days, was a country seat or castle, the modern Bettlern, in Czechish Schebrak or Zebrak, a small town S.W. of Prague, on the way to Pilsen.

P. 195. Regis Hungarie. Sigismund, of Brandenburg, became king of Hungary in 1386 at the age of eighteen, marrying Mary, the young heiress to that kingdom; he became Emperor of Germany in 1411, and died 1437.

P. 210, l. 30. Guydel. May this be Cividale, north-east of Portogruaro? It is rather far east, and is out of Derby's route; but, as supplies were evidently sought in many places, it is possible that John Wilbram may have been specially sent there, and falling ill had to be fetched away. Cividale, or Civitas Austriæ, was the ancient capital of Friuli, under the Lombards.

P. 226, l. 28. Regem Cyprie. James I. de Lusignan, constable of Cyprus, second son of King Hugh IV., was king of Cyprus from 1382 to 1398, and titular King of Jerusalem. Part of the island was at this time under the dominion of the Genoese, who took it in 1373. The royal palace was at Nicosia, whence from Famagusta, the sea-port, was a tolerably long journey.

P. 230, l. , per Ducem ibidem. This personage who gave Derby a present of a butt of wine, was probably the Doge of Genoa, "rodeta" must refer to a seaport, as the wine was brought "de castello and galeam" and we know Derby was at Famagusta on his return voyage. Famagusta was at this time in the hands of the Genoese, contesting nobles occupied alternately the doge ship for several years at this period, and whether the actual possessor or the one in retreat met with Derby at Famagusta he might well wish to be in the good graces of such a prince. The chief officers of the cities Nicosia and Famagusta were vicomtes, viscounts, (Mas Latrie, Hist. de l'Ile de Chypre, t., pt. 2, p. 811, 814), but there hardly seems to be question of them here, neither of them could be called a "Duke."

P. 234, l. 2', per la Ryar. This word should be rayne-rere, i.e. river, the journey from Meaux to Quatsbourg made "by water," along the Seine to the sea, and to Basle along the river. It does not seem possible that Milan and the Rhine should be in question here, that the payment was made in ducats, does not disprove this view, as the ducat was used in several other payments in France and Burgundy. See Introd. p. lxx.

P. 262. Henry Lord Percy was created Earl of Northumberland in 1377, and an esquire of his was with Derby at Koningsberg in 1390 (p. 166). The item here does not show whether the chaplain (13s. 2) were attached to Northumberland or to his son Harry Hotspur, and the horse may have been bought in England, there is nothing to indicate. From a letter of the King of Cyprus to Richard II., 15 July, 1393 (Rymer's Northern Registers, p. 425), it seems that Henry Percy had recently been in Cyprus, no date given. Derby was there probably in February, the travellers possibly may have met, but it does not appear that Hotspur visited Cyprus in company with Derby, as surmised by Bishop Stubbs (Lectures on Mediæval and Modern History, 1887, p. 228).

P. 263, l. 8. Dominus Comes Vertuum. The powerful prince Gian Galeazzo Visconti, Seigneur of Milan (1378 to 1402), held the fief of Vertus, a county of Champagne in France, as the dower of his wife Isabella daughter of King John of France (married 1360). He was known by this title till he was created Duke of Milan in 1396 by the Emperor Wenceslas.

P. 271. Lancastre roy darmorum, i.e. King-at-arms; in other places he is called simply Lancaster herald (see Index). The herald of the famous Sir John Chandos, Chandos le herald, was called king-at-arms on one occasion in 1380 (see The Black Prince, ed. H. O. Coxe, Roxburghe Club, p. lii.) He was with Derby on the Reysa, receiving his wages (12s.), and on 5 November was sent with letters to England (107).

P. 273. Lady Katerina Bremuych. The only fact that I have gleaned about this lady, who appears to have paid some money to the treasurer on Derby's account at Lynn when sailing for Prussia in 1392, is that she held for life the manor of Michelhampton, a charge on which was granted to Joan (the second) queen of Henry IV., and which afterwards was to pass to the new Convent of Sion. (Rot. Par. iv., 243*b*.)

P. 276, l. 2. Cum duce Venis. Antonio Vernieri was Doge of Venice from 1382 till his death on 23 Nov., 1400, a period of renown for the republic, which acquired the marches of Treviso in 1388, and in 1390 restrained the power of the Duke of Milan. He received Derby in state, and the two princes appear to have paid their oblations at St. George's together.

P. 276, l. 19. Apud Troys apud St. Antonium. There was a monastery of St. Antony at Troyes, founded in the 13th or 14th century, a dependant of the diocese of Vienne. (Dictionnaire topographique du Département de l'Aube, par. MM. Théo. Boutiot et E. Socard, p. 140.)

P. 278. Dominus de Clifford; p. 275, l. 1. In die anniversarii filii Lowys Clifford. Roger 5th Lord Clifford had two sons; Thomas, a gallant knight and opponent of Boucicaut in the French wars, who died 4 Oct. 1391, 15 Ric. II. (Inq. P. M. 15 R. II., pt. 1, no. 17), at the early age of 28, seems to be the Lord Clifford for whom Derby gave oblations at Rhodes (in Feb. 1392-3). The younger son, William, died in 1418.——Sir Louis Clifford was probably brother to Robert and Roger the fourth and fifth Lords Clifford, (Whitaker's History of Craven p. 314; Nicolas, Scrope and G. Cont., ii. 469), but there is some doubt as to his exact relationship. He fought in the wars in France and Spain between 1352 and 1373, when he was with the Duke of Lancaster's army which marched to Bordeaux. From 1385 he filled civil offices of trust, being executor to Richard II's mother, and at various times to four other nobles. He was honoured by being elected knight of the garter in 1398. He had a son Lewis who was living in June 1390, being named in a grant of manors of that date, but nothing more is known of him. Possibly the "filius" of the text, whose death on 22 October 1391 Derby commemorates, on his anniversary, i.e. a year later, was this Lewis. He is also said to have had another son, William, but no proof of his existence is known. (See Sir Harris Nicolas, Scrope and Grosvenor Controversy ii., p. 427). For some years he was one of the principal supporters of the Wicliffites (Walsingham, Hist. Angl. i. 356, ii. 159, 216, 253), but in the last years of his life he informed against them and recanted. Dugdale prints his will, which refers to this (Baronage, i., 341); he died in 1404. It is a curious thing that Derby, afterwards so conservative and pious a churchman, should be giving oblations for the son of a man who already, in 1392, had been many years connected with the Lollards; but at this time his father, John of Gaunt, who strongly supported Wiclif, was still alive.

P. 275. Dominus Robert Story. Evidently one of Derby's English friends at Venice, perhaps of his company (though this is the sole mention of his name), as he handed

Derby money for alms to the poor on 4 Dec. This gentleman ("Robert Steri") was at the justs of St. Inglebert on 24 March 1390. (Pichon, Partie inéd. des Chron. St. Denis, p. 71.)

P. 284, l. 15. Dominus de Mencvia. The bishop of St. David's (who also held manorial rights over that town) at this period (1389-1397) was John Gilbert, a Dominican friar and formerly bishop of Hereford. He held high positions of trust under Richard II., one being that of Treasurer of England (History of St. David's, by W. B. Jones and E. A. Freeman, 1856, p. 304). The costly furs bought for him at Venice were doubtless intended as a present.

POSTSCRIPT.

P. 113, l. 16. John Elys, knight, through whom Derby made a gift to a German painter in 1390-1, may possibly have been one of Lord Percy's men; we find him accompanying ("in comitiva") Henry Percy when going from Acquitaine to Gascony in 1393-4 (Gascon Roll. 17 Rich. II., m. 14). If so he would be the third man connected with the Percies mentioned in these accounts (see note, p. 311).

P. 168, l 8. John Marwicsire, benkaman. This name should be added to those of Derby's other henchmen, the Tylmans and Yonge, noticed on page xcvi.

Tradesmen dealt with, probably in London. In Loveney's Wardrobe Accounts, (1 Feb., 20 to 21 R. II., D. of L., cl. 28, bdle. 1, No. 5), upon the last page he enters a list of Derby's creditors that year, among whom are found the following persons from whom purchases were made in 1390, and entered in this volume:—John Clee, draper (35); Henry Pomfreit, sadler (34); Mergarete Stranston, silkwyf (Thomas was perhaps her husband, p. 19); Thomas Grafton, malemaker (5, 6, 19), John Martyn, cordewaner (12).

INDEX I.—PERSONS.

Names which are taken from occupation, and therefore only descriptive, are placed under the name of the occupation with a small initial. A few cases of such names were already true surnames, as William Ferrour, and it is impossible to be certain in all cases, but the rule holds good in general.

All pages up to 140 are in Part I.; those after it in Part II., as indicated by an asterisk. The number of a line, in a page, is put in black type.

Accounts.—

In the keeping of accounts three words meet us: dieta (102/23, 103/6, 258/20) was the daily petty expenditure and consumption of stores by each officer of the household, his day-book; parcella, which is distinct, seems to be the bill for any general or particular purchase, expenditure in gross, &c. ("billa de papiro," p. 6/6), but whether made out by the purchaser or the vendor I do not find; I suspect the purchaser. The abbrevement rolls seem to have been made out from the dictæ alone; the expenses of a day, shortly given under the head of each office, being grouped, day thus following day on the roll. Such a roll is Add. MS. 23,938, the expenses of Margaret of Anjou on coming to England in 1444-5. In the Northumberland Household Book (A.D. 1512) the "clerk of brevements" is to be daily at the "brevynge," and it is required that all the officers have "breved," i. e. taken in their accounts to be entered and checked (pp. 59, 60). "The clerke of ye cochyn shalle alle pyng breve," Boke of Curtasye (A.D. 1460) in Babees Boke, p. 317. See also Liber Niger, Edw. IV., p. 71. In our accounts Reginald Curteys and Burton performed this clerkship (102/24, 103/27) while in Prussia; and when Kyngston made up his full accounts these abbrevements and parcellæ or

READ AT THE GENERAL MEETING

ON THE 2ND MAY, 1893.

THE Council of the Camden Society elected on May 2, 1892, regret the loss by death of one of their number, Mr. JAMES DOYLE, a careful and judicious Antiquary, whose presence at their Meetings was always much esteemed.

They have further to regret the loss by death of the following Members of the Society:—

JOHN BIRKBECK, Esq.,
REV. W. E. BUCKLEY,
REV. HERBERT HILL,
R. C. NICHOLS, Esq.

They also have to report the following accessions to the Society:—

W. K. MARRIOTT, Esq.,

The book for the year 1892-93 is as announced in last year's Report—

THE ACCOUNTS OF HENRY EARL OF DERBY. Edited by Miss TOULMIN SMITH.

The Council had hoped that this book would have been in the hands of Members before the Annual Meeting. It has, however, been a work of much labour, necessitating a good deal of correspondence with Germany, where the East and West Prussian Historical Society have undertaken to publish, simultaneously with the issue of the whole work by this Society, an edition of so much of it as concerns Prussia. Nevertheless there is every reason to expect that it will now be issued without much further delay.

For the year 1893-94 it is impossible to promise absolutely more than one volume, which will be a volume of Miscellany, containing, among other matters, Wentworth and (additional) Hamilton Papers, and a collection of Woodcuts illustrating rare ballad broadsides in the time of the Stuarts. It is a matter of much regret to the Council that the present resources of the Society do not enable them to present Members with a greater number of issues in return for their Subscriptions. An appeal to Libraries and Institutions has resulted in a small addition to the number of Subscribers; but the Council would urge all Members of this Society who have influence with such Institutions to press on their Committees the importance of giving their support to the Society.

OF

READ AT THE GENERAL MEETING

ON THE 2ND MAY, 1894.

THE Council of the Camden Society elected on May 2, 1893, regret the loss by death of the following members:—

ROBERT HUMPHREY COOKE, ESQ., F.R.C.S.,
SIR HARRY VERNEY, BART.,
THE EARL OF WARWICK.

THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G.,
H. J. BUSHBY, ESQ.,
SIR REGINALD PALGRAVE, K.C.B.
THE LORD WELBY, G.C.B.

The Council much regret that "The Accounts of the Earl of Derby," the volume for the year 1892-3, has not yet been published. The delay, for which the Editor offers sincere apologies, has been entirely due to the unexpected amount of labour involved in its production, and it is hoped that the work, which has been so serious a task upon her energies, will be of special value in consequence. The difficulties in making out the itineraries, in consequence of the conflicting dates given in the MS., have been considerable, and the work of identifying the place-names has been no less troublesome. Care had to be taken in drawing up indices of persons and places especially, as but slight clues were sometimes offered. The introduction left by Dr. Pauli at his lamented death was imperfect and inadequate, whilst several of the positions adopted by Professor Prutz seemed to require re-investigation. It is now expected that the Volume will be out of the Editor's hands by the end of May.

The book for the year 1893-4 is

which will shortly be in the hands of Members of the Society.

The second volume of the Clarke Papers, edited by Mr. C. H. Firth, is in an advanced stage of preparation, and will, possibly with another volume in addition, form the issue for 1894-5.

SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, Director.

JAMES GAIRDNER, Secretary.

P.S.—Owing to the delay in the issue of the publications, the Report of the Auditors, commonly appended to the Report of the Council, cannot at present be circulated.

MESSRS. HERRIES, FARQUHAR, and Co., 16, St. James's Street.

The CAMDEN was the first Society established on the popular principle which has since been so widely adopted. It was instituted to perpetuate, and render accessible, whatever is valuable, but hitherto little known, amongst the materials for the Civil, Ecclesiastical, or Literary History of the United Kingdom; and it accomplishes that object by the publication of Historical Documents, Letters, Ancient Poems, and whatever else lies within the compass of its design, in the most convenient form, and at the least possible expense consistent with the production of useful volumes.

The ground occupied by the Camden Society is totally distinct from that which of late years has been taken up by the series of Chronicles and Documents published under the superintendence of the Master of the Rolls. These publications are limited to a period ending with the reign of Henry the Seventh; whereas the Camden Society, though it will still continue to make use of any documents which, from any reason, are not suitable for the Rolls series, will find its principal work in the unpublished matter relating to the history of our country during the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, which is of so varied and interesting a character.

The Subscription of Members is £1 per annum, which becomes due in advance on the first day of May in every year, and is received by the Treasurer, J. J. CARTWRIGHT, Esq., Rolls House, Chancery Lane, W.C.; in return for which the Subscriber receives as many volumes as the Society's funds will enable them to issue during the year.

No books for the year are delivered to Members until the Subscription has been paid.

Members residing in the Country receive the books by post prepaid, except when orders are given to deliver them to a London Agent.

Applications for admission should be made to JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq., Hon. Secretary, Public Record Office, Chancery Lane, W.C.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE CAMDEN SOCIETY.

NEW SERIES.

Till lately it has not been the practice of the Society to offer its current publications for sale to the general public; but to accommodate those who do not desire to become Members, it has been thought advisable to issue a priced list of the Books of the New Series begun in the year 1871, so that single volumes of this as well as of the Old Series may be had separately on application to Messrs. Nichols and Sons, 25, Parliament Street, of whom they may henceforth be procured through any bookseller.

The following are the books of the New Series from its commencement:—

1. Letters and Papers of John Shillingford, Mayor of Exeter, A.D. 1447—1450. Edited by STUART A. MOORE, Esq. 5*s*.

   Valuable as throwing light on the practical working of our institutions and the administration of the law in the reign of Henry VI.

2. The Fortescue Papers, principally consisting of letters on State affairs, collected by John Packer, Secretary to George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. Edited by SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, Esq. LL.D. Director. 5*s*.

Consists chiefly of a miscellaneous collection of letters which were apparently thrown aside by the Duke of Buckingham after he had read them. One paper is of peculiar importance as relating to Raleigh's trial.

3. The Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal from the Reign of Elizabeth to the Accession of the House of Hanover. Edited by Dr. RIMBAULT. 5*s*.

Full of notices of English Musicians connected with the Chapel, and of minute particulars of royal ceremonies, funerals, coronations, churchings, baptisms, marriages, &c.

4. A True Relation of the Life and Death of William Bedell, Lord Bishop of Kilmore. , Edited by THOMAS WHARTON JONES, Esq. F.R.S. 5*s*.

Interesting not only for the light it throws on the working of the Church of Ireland at a most important period in its history, but also for the personal character of Bishop Bedell himself.

5. The Mayor of Bristol's Calendar, by Robert Ricart, Town Clerk of Bristol temp. Edward IV. Edited by Miss TOULMIN SMITH. 5*s*.

Illustrative of municipal antiquities.

6. Notes of Debates in the House of Commons in 1625. Edited from a MS. in the Library of Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., by S. R. GARDINER, Esq. LL.D. Director. 5*s*.

Throws additional light on the quarrel between Charles I. and the House of Commons, and contains new facts relating to Sir John Eliot.

7. A Military Memoir of Colonel Birch, Governor of Hereford during the Civil War. Edited by the late Rev. JOHN WEBB, M.A. F.S.A., and the Rev. T. W. WEBB, M.A. 5*s*.

A storehouse of curious facts relating to the period of the Civil War.

8 and 9. Letters addressed from London to Sir Joseph Williamson while Plenipotentiary at the Congress of Cologne in the year 1673. Edited by W. D. CHRISTIE, C.B. Two vols., 5*s*. each.

Full of news from the Court of Charles II.

10. Account of the Executors of Richard, Bishop of London, 1303, and of the Executors of Thomas, Bishop of Exeter, 1310. Edited by the late Venerable W. H. HALE, M.A., and the Rev. H. T. ELLACOMBE, M.A. F.S.A. 5*s*.

Full of curious details on the household and ecclesiastical furniture of a bishop of the fourteenth century.
